was none but no windows left in one piece. He remains pretty stoic throughout. By the way, the F-16 with which this, as they all are, barbaric bombardment was carried out is in all probability paid at least in part by the government and people of yours truly who overlook the faults of God's very own people as much as this latter litter letters laws like the ones pronouncing the holocaust they suffered an unsurpassable, unequaled, indisputably untouchable epitomy of genocide. Amen. Sela, etcetera (most used word in the UN's writs concerning foods, hence rafi.org is changing to etc-group). But did they suffer it to the extent they claim they did? I think they have seen many of 'm coming, even positively provoked (not to mention perpetrated) them (leaving the weak and unfit behind as an alibi offering sacrifice to find and free 'israeli time' I expect), thinking that throwing up and taking hurdles is a way to keep fit, filter them from the un; cause they are not racists on this score in the way they were once said to be in the money field; it's every clan a match for the next and each for their selves as it was. They seem to actually enjoy the invigorating rapids, gauntlets, wilderness wander years (much like an appetite sharpener stretching the measure of succes, the feast can be flaunted afresh; note the jewish sanatoria upstate NY where the big 'wait out your jade' has been a traditional money spinner; I expect 'the road to welville' was inspired on this part of catholic health fads). So the winnowing, trim and cull serves the vigor of the race and that goes as much without saying as the New Testament, a graft that never took in the Jewish Mind, nor in Palast Wind for that matter. Jews are no longer unique users of this tactic but they had an unfair headstart in taking to wandering as a means to renewal and a test for their ambition which proved so highly infectious that it has provided them with the best cover but hardly any competition cause. . . .. lemme illustrate with a story: Native Americans of the asiatic type beat back and downed a race of giants (according to the makers of greatserpentmound.org/ [[which has greatly expanded since I last visited here is a quote: Modern man, the world eater, respects no space and no thing green or furred as sacred. The march of the machines has entered his blood. — Loren Elseley, anthropologist, The Invisible Pyramid]] a site we do not find till 45th googlie when using 'serpent mounds'; semi interesting find on the way there: earthartist.com/), they went close to all the way down and out themselves due to those giving heed, feed and filling need of the pompous, clumsy and vain attempts at catching up to jewish cunning even while relying on the latter who figured it was all theirs by nature. By NATURE? Yes, a jew is as statist by nature as was Spinoza. -------- For those of you who expressed doubt there is sufficient reason for dwelling on Israeli, Jews and related attitudes I implore you to listen to OBL who voices what is important in terms of undesirably global reaches without even implying his own provocations could possibly cause him to take any blaim (thus proving the kettle-pot dichotomy is still as watertight and oblivious to the truths in unstably dynamic consequences as ever).

And now to conclude:

a word about censorship, plagiarism, will to pledge secrecy to power, patents and encryption ---- How truly Shimmy-Shiny the Tenen vs Winter case is can and must by the same token be placed beyond doubt. > Anthroposophy and "racial" "science" by squirrel Unfortunately, the "Anthroposophy" of Rudolf Steiner is rather questionable from both a scientific, and an anti-racist view. See stelling.nl/simpos/anthroposophy.htm

-------- thereupon I go: Steiner is neither racist nor scientific. . . . . in any conventional sense of the term . .. . .psychedelicosis can lay rightful claim to his heritage, metaphors mostly (well hidden in dull circumspect prose) is all he gave and oh yeah, a stir here and there, still causing those and if you go buy any stuff in health food shops around holland, chances are very high you support BD, a derivative of Anthroposophy, much higher than buying similar stuff from Swiss, Austrian or German hfs. I personally much prefer bio-organisch (they use rockdust and not just homeopathically but quid pro quo). ---- Steiner's fairy tales about people being amorphously afloat/adrift refer to primordial times (comparable to womb like, relatively weightless conditions) when there were hardly any lumps in the soup yet let alone stirring ones; the swirls of procreative juices are nevertheless and always distinctly racial and racially distinct if you insist on raising the issue (like palestinians and jews are not according to recently censored research) but in this case it goes further than that, namely into species and specialisms (is that a suspect and nono too?); I should think not, using a computer is pretty damn special not to say privileged.

. ---------- 26.11.2001 18:34 I am not a vehement defender of Steiner at all; besides the organic ag issue, I base my opinion on a short account of Theodor Lessing (someone I DO admire lots and safely since hardly anyone wants to remember him) meeting him and being made an unfavorable impression upon by Steiner vascillation if I remember correctly; as for genocide and such, I am just writing about that at greater length (than here) and can give you an example: greatserpentmounds.org claims giants once lived all over the east side of the states but were wiped out by a smaller man .. . . I <oops> this item cut off here in the black box contained item at indy-main above (by mistake), there was a little more to it: I mean by definition we all have blood on our hands with ancestors who went through stages with rages against those who thought they were food or in the way thereof; being alive belabours the point that you are holding the long end of a stick on an iceberg filled with just as countless, unknown and irretrievably large a number of ruthless and ravenous but in turn gobbled up or knocked off species. I am aware of the offending passages in Steiner´s work and that´s why I thought to add this, just so you know I know what you refer to. --

Me 27.11.2001 11:14 :people don´t take the trouble to figure my musings anywhere (give or take a rare exception or two) so it doesn´t matter where I post. I will say this: it took me loooong time to digest the first little snatches of sustenance from Dan Winter´s writings (I have known his work since 86 but there were always snippets that stuck took, did a rootshoot and are part of my frame of permanent reference. That this does not mean I am not severely critical of the what I think are flaws and dark sides in his ´system´ and method, as you can see from my last indy file: /Indymediasamples.htm) ---- Post script: this illustrates the reason why I don't like the simpos site, they throw the baby away with the bath water and to be safe they do it consistently I will give them that, but this is one within that small percentage where they do so unwarranted. Yip!

Lemme get back to the documentary festival I was on about in the last issue. I can now present a report on the one that took high accolades and prizes on 'home turf': Jerusalem. I finally saw it after a hurried intro by the makestress on her way to the airport, 'palestinians are depicted as humans and not as israeli', whatever that means; it was a harangue, breathless, takings of the latter edited out along with Arab Israeli (none have citizenship??? 'Couldn't find any' was the makestress her excuse who chose to spend over year editing instead); they show decadent living and the talk vascillates from the pettily personal and minimally subjective to the tastelessly abstract; some examples: at first there is a stress on uniqueness seeming all the more chronic for being strung together from all participant's words (don't they agree nicely about setting themselves apart? How wonderful for them). Then the suddenness of statehood comes in for very special mention on top of that (weren't jews famous for their talent to make themselves usefull to governments for centuries? None of them made it to Israel?). Next the A'dam disease of opening and closing roadways in rapid succesion to install utilities one at a time. The next section makes me believe they all impersonate flash capital, the mechanism of which seems to have gone to their heads. Now it is a smooth development to mention the flash booms, give a voice to the excluded, time flattened in no time flat. The only word I understood was motivatie for which there must not be a Hebrew one.

Lemme tell you about another documentary, the maker of which was impressed with the Moscow Subway (Metro) and indeed it is palacial and museum like on the first floor down but if you go down the 6, 7 and more tunnel stories, a more and more oppresive faith in hell easily grows apace. Built with the Stalinist forces of solidarity but they are gone and now money talks (djingle the djenge or else). The spiderlegs of this megalomania, malodorous metro network flattens into a neat rainbow coloured sprawl on a map but if you read Gravity's rainbow and never could get much of a picture of the subterranean Penemuende rocket factories, you should go see 'Under Moscow' by Leo de Boer (49 minutes, includes lots of old footage. A former functionary bemourns the death of the collective spirit and relates that you would be put away for 10 years if you so much as cracked a joke about the deified top alpha anal perv [[Stalin who had a private line and ways to blow up parts of the city by way of the 'network']] back then).

He must be cited in the sort of put downs like yours or in extremely low figure circulation rags to have become the most cited person alive. 99637 another nasty show of hyprocisy; full proof is now delivered for the following assertion: some shifts of imc participants' level of bias and pathetic fear (to face the fact that they are fightin themselves in others) leave holes in our front big enough for an army of devils to march through; here is item the poster (evoking 12 comments amongst which jj quite recovered from realizing he has a powerful opponent at the indy controls at least part of the time) proceeds to defend the little disputed right to post (even for the right) and he gets nothing but kudo's, however, here is the rub, he links to the site actionfamily.ca, which is one of those 'shut down' (instead of engage in dialogue) dis, dat or dee odder (a tory meet in this case). 99963 jj posts editorial by the Sun; my go: by piet 9:01am Tue Dec 4 '01 As a base line and ground tone this sentiment is sound but let us now try see where the fractures in this *(af)*front are (after some preliminary remarks): A review of all posts that have made various kinds of distinctions along racial lines and atttempts thereat have been, on the whole, I think it is fair to say, unfavorably received. But though dutch elm is a tree like any other has it received treatment and regard equal to fellow way farers in it's genus? ------ Jews are especiall problematic to nominate and/or denominate as a race bycause their blood ranges from the most no longer recognizable as traditional, and so, new mixtures to the most hardcore, petrified yet smell em' from a mile away, suffer from them halfway around the world sort a specimenaces. OK, that said, I want to try gain a little few footholds beyond this argument where Marx got stuck. ------ What many admittedly sound admonishmental aims turn out an attempt at conveying is: please don't make all to blunt, blendyblindbland generalizations where unwarranted and to the exclusion of deviations; this is a generic and soundly bordercrossably applicable qualification to be employed wherever all too broad a brush stroke is made. ---- Now back to the post-digest; as I said my impression these cautions have sounded overabundantly when it came to denounce the passage of judgment on the supposedly crux and culprit covering concept 'jew' but not once, by my knowledge has there been much of an attempt to rescue (not just the dew trodding jew) but say . .. . .the salvagable and precious components subsumed under the word . .. .CAPITALISM!!!!

Honour, cherish, enhance and protect the quanit curious, rare and minor in life. Be equal yet plural, include all so far vote- and voiceless beings minors in the chains of beings but outweighing us bulk-, numerical- and *(an)other(few)wise. -------- The economy ultimately runs on metabolization of sunshine, the rate of which is a prime candidate for a truely honest standard of value, suitably stimulated with the crop sweetening charge with which any paramagnetic rock(dust)* can endow it. -------- All greenery results from (gets woven by) the interaction of dust (bashed unstashed ashes), water time and sun (heavenly fire)?. The full spectrum trace minerals present in lava's, basalts, and glacial gravels act as catalysts in the process of growing disease resistant, nutritious and tasty foods, so let baptism of such stuff as can soak up, then re and prestructure all the good and simple things in life expand the reach, range and after effects of sonic resonances of group endeavours in religion for instance (bu it can be seen to suit every discipline all the more perfect if it tends to 'ultra long run0terminable pragmatism'), ; so far but poorly employed in sermons, concerts, speeches and presentations; go listen to a rock grinder and imagine what this glacier and volcano frict fract action mimicking size reduction could do for ecology, (humility, humus and putting an end to scarcity, phallic fallacies, life atrophying technology addictions and protheses production not to mention extasy) when instruments become pageant pilgrim taskforce, truely moving instrewments.

I regard a basic and common kind of *(p)*recursion as the most provisionary recursivity, in the same sense, innovative *(pre)*venting understood as *(p)*reduction, enabling metabolization of minerals, oxide reduction, reversed fireworks, ashes the hard way; it is more manly to throw water into rock than vice versa. If matter is but light with a talent for accretion and intense densifying, putting on weight and it into the scale, with life un- and enfolding between these extremes it follows that such refreshment where and when growing conditions are favorable is a good idea. Render back to regal lender his legal tender; the rate of photosynthesis could serve as an accurate and regional value standard as was noted earlier; all this would contrast perfectly with the exclusive, top down and speculative emission foundations playing havoc with the cooperative roots of capitalism; agression expressed constructively makes the provisionary difference between provision of abundance versus reactionary fighting over scarce goods.

-------- Mobilizing for terrific vertical traffic: Ideally ballsy braves can deliver proof of their prowess and excercize their muscle in solid ball resulting in polished and powdered rock in emulation of the once statuary (but since crumbling) achetype and role model Cernunnos who let his wealth run away onto and into the ground for which all creation loved him. Historians may scoff at this romantic 'potion notion' taken from a myth they interpret bluntly as just another deified hunting hero but if we are ever to use our mettle and metal peacefully (Cernunnos' torqued ramheaded snake leads me to suspect he minted 'coin of the realm', a thus, wether or not modulated and fancified model is a good start).

Combining voluntary multiculturalisms and racisms with decentralized and relatively private particulars vs nonencrypted but multiply translated and transparantly, impersonal yet 'special' generalities, averages, laws and statistics follows the golden rule of complementarity like ebb and flow, more centralization must logically entail more openness and nondistortion. That yesterday's extra.htm contained the following: "The Northern European social democracies hold their position at the head of the list, and appear to be undertaking a completely disproportionate amount of actual work. Countries in Southern Europe rank only slightly above the United States, while Mexico, Canada and the United Kingdom are positioned near the presumed mean. In traditional economic lingo, the United States appears to be free riding on a collective good provided predominantly by non-Americans. The stark nature of this contrast is a devastating blow to arguments about post-scarcity "gift cultures". If the wealthiest country in the world is one of the least active (relative) contributors to open source development, it seems ludicrous to explain said development as a function of post-materialism. ---- Economic Theory Revisited ---- With a relatively small sample size, this survey is not robust enough to draw statistically conclusive findings about all open source projects. But this is not the point. As has already been discussed, conducting a simple random survey of developers is completely infeasible since it invariably requires selecting on the dependent variable: the very criteria used to define what constitutes an open source project will inevitably introduce bias. It also seems likely that the international distribution of developers will change as we shift across the matrix presented above. Commercial support for complementary projects is undoubtedly stronger in the United States than in Europe, if only because American equity markets have historically supported open source companies.

Another blockbuster online now:
I posted the following at indymedia.org open newswire 211989
The posthumously publised writings of John Hamaker after his aeons and cultures spanning book of 78 called Survival of Civilization (SoC) are online (in pfd format 2.9Mb) now. These follow ups are enhanced with a liberal selection of quotes and relevant facts from weather watchers quarternarians etc by Don Weaver the catalyst for and co-author of SoC --- Follow ups???? Geezz, hardly; the true leader is as alone as the hero in King of Hearts I guess. This compilaton is a digital of the follow ups Don Weaver circulation privately under the name of Solar or Ice age bulletin, I just asked him if he will let me do a prfr format of it (saves around 10x average paper reqs for conventionally 'full' formats); look for it. http://www.remineralize-the-earth.org/don/ http://www.remineralize-the-earth.org/don/tlarte.pdf 2.9Mb / remineralize-the-earth.org features a new yahoo forum wherin "earthdon" wrote this to me:

> ..... You may want to consider re-stating just what you would like and for what reason*(s)*, so I/we can give your request to change the current presentation of the books in PDF form remineralize-the-earth.org/don.

------ you forgot to add: .... some thought -- to finish that sentence,. .. . talk about making sense, Don. To make my request simple: offer your books in as many formats as possible to accomodate differently restricted potential downloaders. I personally think the format offered now is paper wasteful but I realize I am in the extreme end of the use efficiency factor. Thanks for all your work Don and I see your adress changed. Finally escaped urbanity? I guess I am about to soon too. Any suggestions? How was Scotland? Have they a website up?

> --------- (It was revised about a week ago to create bookmarks and thumbnails for both books, plus to activate the inner Table of Contents, making them easier to use.) Thanks for looking to network in Europe and worldwide. The college/climate info you posted was interesting, and I suggest all users of this Forum be somewhat careful of posting too much info at a time, and to strive for clarity and succinctness, so that everyone can understand the words and not get bogged down with more "information overload." (Now, you may want to "take me to task" for producing the 540-page TO LOVE AND REGENERATE THE EARTH. I can only say I tried to make a comprehensive case which could persuade even the often overly-skeptical "scientific community," and people in general, that we have an eco-climatic crisis needing our awakened and enlightened response.) ------------ Anwar: I think what you say may matter very much, and it would be wise to assume it does. If you read what John Hamaker says about sand > and the various particle sizes in the soil in Chapter 2 of THE SURVIVAL OF CIVILIZATION, and study the chart on particle sizes and relative surface areas for microorganism mineral consumption, you will see there is a vast difference between sand and silt and the finest silts we usually call "dust." John felt some sands (not the leached out, predominantly quartz sands) could be useful if run through a close-set roller mill, or the like, to reduce them to finer sizes. If you have a sand with sufficient fine silt or dust in it, then you or your local desert may be able to produce abundantly, with our help in seeding, planting trees, etc. as you suggest. Coral or limestone sands might have positive uses, like other "liming" materials, but those tend not to be complete, full-spectrum remineralization materials to produce the most fertile soils and chains-of-life. If this response has been inadequate in some way, please let me know, Piet and Anwar. --------- Anwar, I too began making the soil and health, Etc., connections while a student at U.C. Berkeley in the 1970s, and appreciate your "uncommon sense." Let's hope we'll soon see the day when it becomes common! ~Don Weaver

How many formats are possible? ---------- infinite Don, this is the cyber age you know. ---- Can you list them in order of what you consider most to least useful, including PDF? ------ pfd is great for folk with unlimited access and optimal screen quality/lighting seating, etc. A small majority of all users I guess. I myself use prfr (personal, home, candlelit and unheated reads in 'my' shack ('bout to lose it actually, again) tailored to taste); takes me all day to fix up an issue of 15-20 pages and I put it online then too, trimming some of the more disappointing items out of the average 6-12 of them. Thus I have a newspaper that is printed almost to the edge of the paper in a small lettersize which puts my effeciency gains (versus the conventional printeditions and the version formats behind 'print this document' buttons and icons. Ever seen any yet, you netphobe? :-) <- that's a smiley for you) ----- No one has to use any paper to read them, but why do you consider PDF "paper wasteful"? How much paper do you expect to use? ------many webpublications feature besides/behind articles for their online readership. Note: my formating is so utterly compact bycause I perpetrate sweeping manipulations, wiping all headlines and section heading including white lines out in one fell swoop. I seperate items with ----dashes---) up around/upward of 5-10. I am not sure I impress anybody but myself with that though; seems people get annoyed about the lack of paragraphs and whitelines and such. That's what I understand from the little feedback I was blessed with so far. I think the biggest objection to pdf is that is has large system requirements, definitely over the heads of your average poorer user in say a foreign country; another problem is the download time with such a hump; you'd have to at least cut it down (comparable to your giant peach simile), except this time people may not even get any peach at all cause working across phonelines in the backwaters of digitalia is painfully slow and the longer it takes (the bigger the bite) the more glitches can 'abort' the transaction. see mediageek.org who ships old computers to equador from san fransisco or portland I believe to get an idea about other aspects of reaching as wide an audience as possible. > Ed. N.: This article, previously published in The Astrological Journal (vol 39. n. 4, 1997), completes the first one, published in Réalta and then by C.U.R.A. My thanks to Maurice McCann for his kind help.The Celtic 'tree zodiac' fabrications, the direct result of Robert Graves' invention of a tree calendar', have become an almost insurmountable barrier to any serious study of the forms of astrology that were practised by pre-Christian Celtic society. For fifty years, from the time Graves' published his book The White Goddess (1946), a veritable industry has been built up among his acolytes, which preach artificial astrological ideas based on Graves' spurious arguments. Some have even published books on what they fondly term 'Celtic Astrology', manufacturing a completely artificial 'astrological system'.

-----My comment: this article is a vituperative tirade against Graves personally on top of probably accurate criticism of his scholarship; RG falsified and bent facts with his steelaglow setting preleptic leapage? Yeah, you bet, and I say: all the more glory to Graves for inventing a tree calender! > The New Cryptography by Bruce Sterling Literary Freeware -- Not For Commercial Use from THE MAGAZINE OF FANTASY AND SCIENCE FICTION, Writing is a medium of communication and understanding, but there are times and places when one wants an entirely different function from writing: concealment and deliberate bafflement. Cryptography, the science of secret writing, is almost as old as writing itself. The hieroglyphics of ancient Egypt were deliberately arcane: both writing and a cypher. Literacy in ancient Egypt was hedged about with daunting difficulty, so as to assure the elite powers of priest and scribe. Ancient Assyria also used cryptography, including the unique and curious custom of "funerary cryptography." Assyrian tombs sometimes featured odd sets of cryptographic cuneiform symbols. The Assyrian passerby, puzzling out the import of the text, would mutter the syllables aloud, and find himself accidentally uttering a blessing for the dead. Funerary cryptography was a way to steal a prayer from passing strangers.

> ABILITY TO PAY & INABILITY TO PAY, BOTH UNDER MONETARY FREEDOM- AND UNDER MONETARY DESPOTISM, SHOULD BE SEPARATELY CONSIDERED: -...ABILITY TO PAY & INTEREST RATES: The ability to pay ANY interest -rates or not is often more important than the fact of either -high or low interest rates. High interest rates do not matter as -much when sales are easy to achieve, profit margins are high and- do not merely represent, to a large extent, high inflation rates. -Low interest rates are not an encouragement to take up loans and to- increase production when customers are missing, sales are low and -factories work only at a fraction of their potential, while -unemployment is high. Nor do low interest rates CAUSE inflation -or do high interest rates CAUSE a deflation. To judge the economy- and economic developments only by interest rates, especially only -the interest rates for monopoly and forced currencies, is almost -as one-sided as is phrenology, in trying to determine a person's- capabilities and character merely from the shape of his skull. -- J. > 192960 repost of K Phillips book review ('bout plutocracy)

somebody posted it with the unwieldy sort of URL's that make text run off the page on some browsers. PreS: I (Piet) added a critique of a review for Wealth and democracy in the NYRoB --- runaway male (spermlikely proliferative) monies should have the more cautious (decent and prudent) state monies as complements --- just cause Prussians didn't handle the ballsiness that era spawned (precisely thanks to the very nicely balanced sets of private and state monies people got to shovel and sign around) don't mean such positive and driving forces should be taboo for ever and anon.

a note on the NYRoB (nybooks.com) article by Jeff Madrick reviewing 'Wealth and Democracy' by Kevin Phillips: Jeff seems confused about what and where wide and narrow can be usefully employed and imposes such an exclusively quantitative meaning on them (reflective of his wish for an unmixup of these terms perhaps); he applies the former to geography (in a validating and approving manner) but the latter adverbially added to (come to the aid of?) abstraction gets denied a place and/or gets labelled as getting one noplace. In other words he seems to regard widened horizons (especially actual extent of territory: broad sweeps of hinterland) as good (UK supplanting holland and in turn trumped by the so much more vaster US) vs narrowed conceptions and points of view (abstractions) being bad. This turning of matter and its mappings into a positive and negative pole fails to explain how they remain inseparably concommital and should be harmonized, we will fail to do so at our 'caust' and that of all affected. These (probably his own) thoughts come at the end of a 'delugial' digit distillation faithfully

Portland indy is a fount of news about those sympathetic with the sensible sides of (and possesing justifiable, possibly imperative and healthy respect for) primitivism; the majority of features there are on green issues; here is a stinging sample: http://portland.indymedia.org :8081/front.php3?article_id=14401 Some beauty broad who has to turn herself in??? Next the equation of P with PoMo seemed to made a big deal of; well, the undifferentiatability argument is a cynical passe partout legitimating abruptness, inconsistency and superficial Schumpeterian style metabolism no? Sure, most P's are mystical minded folk and maybe I'll never move them to move on to mist-mindfulness with me, let alone get down to the practical bits and grits of the fresh mud movelets. Booth's long (and badly edited) piece doesn't Monte Verita, rainbow gatherings and the like which is an unforgivable flaw in such an endeavor as these precursoring and recurrent circumstances were/are the closest approach, *(fore?)*taste and make believe of the intended conditions. Friendly advice can turn bloody seriously vengeful when flouted and repudiated. This happens cause it is often tied to selfworth and -esteem, secureness of identity and a dent sets a trend; flaws and imperfections makes all of nature try all the more prolifically and fighting that which you are against can be done in only one way effectively: walk away to lit. and fig. outgrow them.

-- fine but that was only to make up for the incredible mistakes they made like reprinting the same item about 4 or 5 times in the same issue, just bycause in it was sounded the political deathknell for the utterer of this very thought, this man brave enough to hold it up to the brightest spotlight had instead to pay with his life; i'd rather the thought was irrecognizably disintegrating.

Meanwhile, you wrote:

> “Under the present system of federal government monopoly on the issuance of legal tender and central banking via the Federal Reserve, interest rates are kept artificially high, an artificial shortage of credit is maintained and access to finance capital is constricted.“

Piet: and this is supposed to be up to date? Poster proves that enternot internil is a sewer; after much fasting and fruit eating a pellet of times past long lodged in his bowels has sprung free to see the light of day once more; well, it should feel rite at home cause although the above is no longer quite true, the effects of low interest and huuuuuugely risen debt ‘tolerance’ and burden bearability works out to the same sordid reality.

> “These arrangements centralize wealth and concentrate economic power in a myriad of ways. Carson argues that "under a system of free banking, cooperative banks would be able to form and issue private bank notes as credit against the output of future production.“

Piet: You forget to mention this needs consensus of all involved and affected lest inflation rears its maul.

What one foresees, fears and fights, is often an indication and warning about the constraints one selfimposes while envisioning the future. These expectations and diagnoses are mere extrapolations from opeative, set in their ways and steady as they go courses. The less one grasps and voluntarizes the pandorian panoply of arsenal triggers (which woud take insertians of reluctance hesitancy comparison filling in and folding out and choosing from amongst ranges varying at and in more and more stages till we find the way back to wonder and loving squeezes which turn rock into a blessing mist and a tasteful i sing) that keep on on them in a generations long lasting and deeply gutted rut routine, the more one feels imposed upon. from sf 147515 + 161 (includes many gifs) america haters Gathering IP Evidence --- by Fire with Fire • Monday September 16, 2002 at 03:53 PM -- If the SFIMC group wants to protect themselves they should begin gathering IPs of offensive postings (keep track of these, throw the rest out). Anonymizers and proxies have recently been defeated by a simple Javascript which can trick the viewer's machine into forwarding its IP even through a proxy or anonymizer. See wired.com/news/technology/ 0,1282,19091,00.html "All we can do is log the real identity of a client machine, despite most precautions they might take to prevent us from doing so . . . Devices such as firewalls, proxies, SOCKS hosts, etc., all succumb easily to the call of the Java siren . . . Even the mighty anonymizer retires after the first round, nose bleeding and ego bruised. To complete this recipe, we take one call to InetAddress.getLocalHost(), mix it with a call to AppletContext.showDocument() . . . And there you have it. Because the applet is running on the client machine and it is allowed to call InetAddress.getLocalHost(), it can find out the client machine's IP. Although this may surprise some users (especially those using the anonymizer, a proxy meant to protect client browser identities from snooping Web servers), the ferreting out of this information is not really a dangerous new invasion of privacy. The Web is not a private place, and this demonstration only serves to bring that point home. Your browser is probably a blabbermouth. It is a clever move to use Java to look up an IP at the client end through several proxy layers, but not all that clever." ------ So you see there is no defence. If SFIMC has the will they can detect and log the trolls. Sure they might be using dynamic IPs as well, but again this is little defence. Any given IP address can be accounted for by the ISP at a given time, and thus if legally necessary the identity of the user can be revealed. Also even if active for only a moment, experienced webmasters ought to be able to gather a simply massive amount of data about the machine and user in question. See https://snoop.anonymizer.com /cgi-bin/peleus.cgi for a really basic look at how much can be done, very simply and easily. Check the source code on that page to see how. ------------------

> Five counter-arguments Ethan Mitchell 9:28am Wed Sep 25 '02 tr11@sover.net comment#205284 Prostitution is terrible. Work is terrible. But let's not get carried away. ---- 1] Existing prohibition is not effective, and gives rise to brutal and corrupt vice squads. As in any prohibition economy, the government and the high-end suppliers gain money and power because of the law. The little people lose. ---- 2] The epidemological literature suggests very strongly that legal prostitutes access medicine more often and more effectively, reducing STD transmission rates severalfold. ----- 3] Prostitutes in many parts of the world are trying to unionize, as they obviously need to do. The fact that their job is illegal makes this almost impossible (although it has been done, e.g. in Kerala) ---- 4] Like oppressed workers everywhere, prostitutes are trying to earn money. In cities like Bangkok, the sex trade constitutes a large portion of all available jobs. Any righteous plan to eliminate these jobs has to include some way to re-employ several million people. ---- 5] While many prostitutes are effectively chattel slaves, so are many other workers. Auto plant workers get killed for going on strike, and yet no one says it should be illegal to make cars. The question of "free choice" in this case, is not an abstraction but a question about who is really going to enforce a prohibition economy, and who will benefit from it.

It just gets more more sick ! communitycurrency.org/vital.html A Vital Piece of the Puzzle- by Carol Brouillet [REVIEWS] Dollars for Terror- The United States and Islam by Richard Labeviere, Algora Publishing, New York, 2000, 392 pages -- In 1994 Labeviere's friend, Ali, a Muslim, was assassinated by an Islamist organization. Ali was savagely opposed to the Islamists who are "mutilating their religion and betraying their country," (1) he would tell anyone who would listen. Labeviere began his investigation to try to understand his friend's death. The path inevitably led to the financial circuits of terrorism- the banks, the businesses, both legitimate and illegitimate, to the official and secret structures of Saudi finance, the Muslim brothers, to the oil monarchies allied with the United States, to the intelligence agencies, the CIA, and its Saudi and Pakistani counterparts. Based on a hundred interviews, numerous journalistic investigations, years of archival research and travels, Labeviere painstakingly deconstructs the notion that the U.S. is a beacon of democracy. America's imperial intention is fed by an alliance with the Islamists, new worldwide circuits of organized crime, a transnational hybrid of business and politics. Islamist ideology blends perfectly and complements neoliberalism where the true god is "money." The subordination of everything, national borders, institutions, cultures, states, and nations, in pursuit of profits is the keystone of a totalitarian New World Order. This supranational order comprised of the richest and most powerful transnational corporations bullying governments through the World Trade Organization, International Monetary Fund, World Bank military coersion complements Islamism which mainly seeks to accumulate money and power, destroy the secularized state, turn citizens into subjects, and annihilate the rights of women. In his chapter- "The Mercenaries of Globalization" Labeviere writes - -----

> Iraqi VP: Bush and Saddam should fight duel by AP via ProletarianNews 2002-10-03 11:23:13.533355-07 AP. 3 October 2002. Iraqi vice president offers novel way to solve crisis: Bush and Saddam should fight duel. BAGHDAD -- An Iraqi vice president offered a unique solution to the U.S.-Iraq standoff: a duel between George W. Bush and Saddam Hussein. Taha Yassin Ramadan said the duel could be held at a neutral site and with U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan as the referee. Ramadan, wearing a green uniform and a black beret, made his remarks without giving any outward sign that he was joking although reporters who were present detected a note of irony in his voice. "A president against a president and vice president against a vice president and a duel takes place, if they are serious, and in this way we are saving the American and the Iraqi people," Ramadan told the Associated Press Television Network. Iraq has two vice presidents, and Ramadan did not say whether he or Taha Muhie-eldin Marouf would take on Dick Cheney. www.utopia2000.org -------- Good Idea! a larger piece about the death of this that and the other - -- the conclusion:

> The pan-capitalist takeover of the virtualization process is sold to electorates through the politics of greed, resentment, and hatred. There will be sacrificial victims of the "middle-class tax cuts" that buy off opposition to the pan-capitalist power grab. First of all, the greatest threats of all are targeted: unmarried teen-age mothers. They are the ones who produce the gang members who deal the drugs that pollute the social body. No safety net for them. And for their children, orphanages that will never be, because they will be too expensive to build. No safety net; "tough love" instead. It is a favor to the person deprived of "welfare" to remove them from dependency. As Rep. Clay Shaw of Florida says, Republican welfare reform "sends a powerful signal that the government cannot and will not solve everyone's problems." Under these smarmy rationalizations is sadistic glee in trampling the weak. The unmarried teen-age mother of the black underclass has enormous abuse value. All of the male and Christian-right backlash against the new-left backlash can now be exploited to satisfy the will to punish. Robert Greenstein, a policy analyst, noted that the Republican welfare conclusion to a larger piece about the death of this that and the other - The Triumph of Abuse Value -reform bill would cut off funds for low-income families with children who have cerebral palsy: "I wonder why they're doing something like that. Are they cutting to help finance cuts in the capital gains tax?" [Carol Jouzaitas, "House GOP seeks major welfare cuts," Chicago Tribune, 2/10/95, Sec. 1, p. 14.] That's the way technotopian conservative corporatism works. And don't forget the abuse value. --- Michael A. Weinstein is Professor of Political Science at Purdue University. He has published nineteen books, ranging from cultural theory to metaphysics. With Arthur Kroker he co-authored Data Trash: The Theory of the Virtual Class.

seems the same issues crop up everywhere: this one is on the traffic stopping logistics of a Porltland demo:

> 26188 Portland + 16 (two of 'm here) but there are distinctions by The One True b!X 9:49am Sat Oct 12 '02 I believe taking the street and stopping automobile traffic is an effective tactic, as do other activists. I know everyone doesn't agree, but -- with Congress having just given up all control of war-making powers to a madman -- we've gotten to the point where we need to shake people up and get them to pay attention to what's going on. Unquestionably. In the end, it comes down to what approach*(es)* are going to get people to pay attention, and what approaches are going to make them dismiss the cause. And, no, that's not my way of saying there's never any place for disruptive disobedience. There just needs to be -- and this isn't a direct response to anything here, just a theoretical observation -- a capacity to make a distinction between actions which help the cause, and actions which are simply good for the egos of those involved. Because I've seen both, and the latter are usually far more harmful than they are helpful. There's another issue too, and it's one I don't think the more radical people here like to think about. If you want to get people attention, and make them think about things -- normal people, mainstream people, etc – than you are going to have to play some image games. Back during the civil rights movement in the south, when they headed out for marches or disruptive lunch counter sit-ins, everyone dressed in their Sunday best. Why? Because of the image it projected. Tons of well-dressed people marching the street. Or dozens of well-dressed people sitting at the lunch counter and eventually getting arrested. Why was this important? In part because if even just a small percentage of the mainstream white-bread American audience who were middle-of-the-road on racial issues saw such footage, especially during the arrests, they would see all these nice, respectable-looking weel-dressed people and maybe think, "Well that doesn't seem right. What's going on down there?" Would it changes the minds of hardcore racists? No. But neither are we right now trying to convert the hardcore neo-conservative hawks pushing the war. Anyway, this is not as structured as I wanted these issues to be. I'ts early. I've had no coffee. The usual disclaimers. I'll discuss them again more coherently at some point. www.poxamericana.us/ ----------- I have to agree with b!X on this one -- I think that taking over the whole street was counterproductive in this case. Maybe if had been a huge rally with thousands, but a small demo with just under 200? Not only would have keeping it to the rightmost traffic lane pissed off Middle America less (and we don't want to piss off Middle America -- we want to get Middle America on our side), and it would have allowed the traffic driving past to see what the protest was all about. (Those in vehicles more than a few cars back saw no demo at all -- just a mysterious outbreak of worse-than-normal traffic congestion.) And yes, I was there....

INDY38-41 (covers the end of 2002)

Could go on hiatus for a bit due to housing troubles; citycouncil for the townsection I'm in is yuppinup some of what they own in my neighbourhood without really affecting me nextdoor and out of site with my back to it but though they claim to take participation seriously, it seems to be a cover for the opposite; after 4 years of living behind a curtain in a bikeshed against ex school turned artist studio complex I am being summarily dismissed and thrown back into the street. When I asked to be given an option to rent my 'studio' (the others are lived in as well though not officially) I have gotten zero support on 'open' night with 20 neighbours attending although an earlier leafletting action (some months ago) got me over 20 signatures from those directly (wether orally aurally olfactorily or visually) affected by my presence; I think my days in Amsterdam, maybe even Holland are coming to an end. - Could be the perfect excuse to finally get to make/do that long wished for tour of rural *(euro)*communities; care to join anyall? – I just aint gonna fight and get embroiled and tangled up in all too human legalistics if I can help it – If they're not pleased to have me *(stand out as an embodiment of modesty or a sad betrayal of potential?? actually this might be the place to reformulate a thought I had recently concerning rage but lost - I have allowed time to run out on me (closing times, credits, etc) before saving stuff a few times recently so I lost a version but later ones should get better no? Here goes starting with a jot from last Sunday morn: Rage, revenge and all such frenzy simply qualifies as disappointment with one's own miscalculation and unrealism being turned into another's culpability, neglect, disrespect, blame and down the whole range to evil intentions. Rage is the imposing and intimidating stopgap storm trying to fly across, impotent to fill, and seen soberly enough, actually causing and creating the rifts, gaps and crumbly crevices between faultily and miscontruedly extrapolated behaviour, expectations discoloured and biased by desire, but fly across them – an emotion exclusive to highly stratified societies (the ones prone to building too high up [[to handle it all on a voluntary basis]] or worse high rises other than in the treehab.com manner). ---- butterbach.net/freebank.htm 2.654K !!! document: on Free Banking & Monetary Freedom

I made free to cut it up in 4 sections (docs) 200 pages altogether
http://members.lycos.nl/vadercats/freebankingalphabet.doc*(527K)* freebankingalphabet2.doc (463K) + -3.doc (841K) and -4.doc (783K) == Max printable paper space occupied/utilized in this margin to margin format (used for all my prfr lately); it cuts of a few percent of the bottom line letter and therefore warns you about being 'outside' them but if you are in Europe with a HP printer you should be alrite; here is one of the very first entries:

> ABILITY TO PAY & INABILITY TO PAY, BOTH UNDER MONETARY FREEDOM- AND UNDER MONETARY DESPOTISM, SHOULD BE SEPARATELY CONSIDERED: -... ABILITY TO PAY & INTEREST RATES: The ability to pay ANY interest -rates or not is often more important than the fact of either -high or low interest rates. High interest rates do not matter as -much when sales are easy to achieve, profit margins are high and- do not merely represent, to a large extent, high inflation rates. -Low interest rates are not an encouragement to take up loans and to- increase production when customers are missing, sales are low and -factories work only at a fraction of their potential, while -unemployment is high. Nor do low interest rates CAUSE inflation -or do high interest rates CAUSE a deflation. To judge the economy- and economic developments only by interest rates, especially only -the interest rates for monopoly and forced currencies, is almost -as one-sided as is phrenology, in trying to determine a person's-capabilities and character merely from the shape of his skull. -- J. Z., 22.4.97. --------- ABILITY TO PAY & UNEMPLOYMENT: Unemployment will be reduced to a minimum only once ability to pay or to clear is maximised, developed to its natural limits, which consists in the ability and readiness of people to offer productive labours and services in return, at market rates. - J. Z., 25.9.93, 24.5.97. ----------- -------- ABILITY TO PAY: The unused and undemanded ability to pay and to- clear, via privately or cooperatively issued money tokens and -cooperatively organized clearing facilities, upon the unused own ready-for-sale goods and service -potential depends, is enormous - and still largely unknown in every -country. Otherwise, inflations, deflations, stagflations, mass -unemployment and unwanted and not merely accidental poverty could- be done away with within hours or days at most - while- governments do not even foresee their total abolition within years- or even decades - and continue to stumble around in the dark, -causing much wrong and damage with their "activities" and "measures", unaware that and how they caused most major social -problems in the first place. Alas, the billions of victims of- monetary despotism have so far shown little awareness of its-existence and desire for its replacement by monetary freedom. The- situation is as bad as in the Dark Ages, where religious -tolerance was not appreciated or in the times of slavery, when- most slaves would rather be masters but very few slaves wanted -the abolition of slavery and all too many "free" people were opposed to the abolition of slavery. - J. Z., 29.7.96, 19.3.97, 28.8.02. --------- ABILITY TO PAY: Under monetary despotism the ability to supply wanted goods and services is not equalled by the ability to pay, because it is artificially separated from it. Under monetary freedom the two are naturally combined. The producers and traders can issue sound money to sell all the goods and services they do offer between them, at market prices, to those who want them, because they do, directly or indirectly supply their customers and clients with the exchange media to purchase their goods and services. - J. Z., 27.6.89.
> ABOLITION OF MONEY & ABOLITION OF PROPERTY & ABOLITION OF FREE -TRADE & FREE ENTERPRISE: Many consider this kind of utopia still -to be an ideal. They do not distinguish e.g. between the abolition -of the money of monetary despotism, the abolition of all monopoly -property, e.g. in land, or public utilities, the abolition of government ownership of its whole territory and of all its -inhabitants as tax slaves, military and brain-washing slaves, the- abolition of the protectionist variations of international trade- and the abolition of privileged or monopoly enterprises, - from- the optional, competitive, cooperative and voluntaristic alternatives of monetary freedom, self-managed and cooperatively-owned and run productive capital, free trade and free market- alternatives and the limited territorial State options from the -almost unlimited options of panarchism or voluntarism that are all -based on exterritorial autonomy for all volunteer communities, in -which they could even practise freely all their anti-capitalistic -and anti-individualistic ideals - at their own risk and expense. - I, too, would find the abolition of all forced and exclusive- currencies very desirable and that of all special privileges, -grants and subsidies granted by governments to some of their-subjects, at the expense of others. And I would not want to see any form of government to government "trading" and "enterprise" -continued otherwise than at the expense of consenting victims. - -From the wrongful application of the property rights principle to -property in people, slavery, all too many descendants of former- slaves or serfs seem to have inherited an emotional aversion- against all property claims, even quite rightful ones. Perhaps -there is something physical remaining in their genes, an -inherited memory of their ancestors standing on the auction block, as -slaves, at a slave market. Our present economic system has -not made it easy for them to acquire and maintain productive- property and to profit from it. The class warfare mentality, the-split into employers and employees and the anti-industrial- warfare between them for their "right shares" in the added value- of production, has coloured most of their thinking and their- actions. But from the admitted and so far all too neglected evils- and wrongs of the State paper money of monetary despotism and of -the scarcity problems with any forced and exclusive rare metal- currencies, one should not conclude that all kinds of monies must be alike despotic and difficult to attain. The situation would be- completely different under freedom to issue, clear, accept,- refuse, rate and discount alternative currencies, with legal- tender confined to the issuer and his own notes. Least of all -should supposed enemies of property discard "self-ownership" and -self-management and cooperative ownership options and render -themselves the helpless victims of central planners,- decision-makers and owners of themselves and of all other- "public" property. Without monetary freedom all the other rights -and liberties and opportunities were incomplete and one's potential could not always be fully realized. One restriction and -suppression led to many others. The full release of all creative -energies (Leonard E. Read) can only be achieved when monetary freedom is realized, -too. Otherwise we all live in nation-wide prison-yards, confined -to the productive and exchange activities permitted to us and- which we can manage to arrange with the exclusive and forced- prison currency provided by the authorities of this prison. That- situation does, often, provoke strong anger, even destructive and- riotous behaviour and terrorist and mass murderous actions based- on the "principle" of collective responsibility. Then scapegoats -are sought and prosecuted or even brutally abused and murdered as supposed culprits: supposed conspirators, members of other races- and religions or nations, as immigrants and settlers and- competitors for jobs and business opportunities. - Money, property & trade must be liberated rather than abolished or -suppressed. The forms in which they presently do exist do not -really deserve their names. However, volunteer communities should- be at liberty to keep them for themselves, as long as they are -not forced upon any dissenters. - J. Z., 17.4.97. -------

ABORIGINES' BANKS OF ISSUE: There is much more to independence -for Aborigines than ownership of land, traditional life-styles,- dances, languages, arts and crafts activities and the primitive- and limited trades they engaged in across the continent, access -to alcoholic drinks, drugs and government schools and hand-outs at the expense of taxpayers. - If they started to organise their- own banks of issue and provided jobs for themselves in this way,- the governments would have a very hard stand in suppressing this -self-help effort and would be more likely to grant them- exemptions from monetary despotism or even repeal these laws when -other ethnic groups would thereupon claim the same liberties for -themselves. Voluntary taxation for Aborigines could also- become a popular issue, when the same people declined, at the- same time, to accept any further handouts at the expense of- taxpayers. Fully self-employed and not forced to pay taxes to- governments that they do not want for themselves, their combined purchasing power could be large enough to commercially acquire more land than has -already been granted to them. Actually, per head of the- Aborigines population in Australia probably much more land- already available to them than is to any other ethnic -group or to the average Australian. Admittedly, this land is often among the least fertile land and they and it are still under all too many government restrictions. But how much could really free people achieve even upon- such land? Compare the development of Hong Kong and of some areas of Israel. - J. Z., 27.5.97

> (54) The murder of American officers by their troops was an openly proclaimed goal in Vietnam. As one GI newspaper demanded, "Don't desert. Go to Vietnam, and kill your commanding officer." (55) And they did. A new slang term arose to celebrate the execution of officers: fragging. The word came from the fragmentation grenade, which was the weapon of choice because the evidence was destroyed in the act. (56) In every war, troops kill officers whose incompetence or recklessness threatens the lives of their men. But only in Vietnam did this become pervasive in combat situations and widespread in rear base camps. It was the most well-known aspect of the class struggle inside the army, directed not just at intolerable officers, but at "lifers" as a class. In the soldiers' revolt, it became accepted practice to paint political slogans on helmets. A popular helmet slogan summed up this mood: "Kill a non-com for Christ."

Reasons for such behaviour found throughout my indy (mostly main) hi-lite file series. I think to nevertheless be able to accurately convey the reasons for Holland’s lukewarm politicization (apart from the specialist enjoying a headwind now that the free agents have failed utterly, shattering their spindly personality spikes under the intense movement and proximity parliamentary conditions force one to quickly build a tolerance for, landslide success however did not allow for a gradual enough habituation and all too radical alternatives weren’t really on offer and so it will be back to ‘normal’ Dutchness soon) --- I mean, Holland is secularized and rife with artificial frontlines, walls hedges and many derivatives thereof at ever closer quarters and you bet that on every one of such beats uppity yuppity beats are beat closely yet often beaten up – more and more in fact due to cultural clashes – A people with a cultural constellation and palette harbouring a little too much flexibility here and too little there meets and mixes with another in sum perhaps equally far, but nevertheless at a very different remove from optimum but a nasty angle to each other, the tangle angle where little conscious complementation (through voluntary, jocular joust, bardic ribaldry and a growing variety of consensually premeditated disciplined competition in order to discover how to both change self and culture irrecognizably but remain motivated by conviction and constant stream of evidence proving the mix unifying and worth it) gets implemented, traumatizations carry on and worsen, productivity suffers even under increasedm more costly and feverish activity --- -------- Blowbackfire is an acute buzzword now; graphically showing what parental amonst other less primary more lethal alienation can cause, I am not so sure punishment (when made into a profession and specialism – you guys and the swiss are the smartest -- hasn’t as much a catalytic as a detterence factor); not only do the united States of America need to recognize and deal with such as their own spawn, the whole world, especially europe needs to become prudent enough and regard the Jewnighted Stasis of Aimeerykey as their own alienated brood; one of the very reasons our folk are so civilized, docile and pacifist, yet strong and enduring.------- As I understand the witnessing of your revolution and struggle for autonomy by the international community and the net was a reason for it’s success. Now compare with the middle east. Historically far less remote and more hotly contested (chronically, to the point of chronicle obliterating) but I think the crucial difference is pride, overblown self-confidence known as arrogance and scorn for neighbours who are always too close for comfort and must be outbred, outcompeted and out terrorized.

17:37"Anarcho-capitalism"? Please. This is a tired topic of debate. I am both disappointed that Libertarians are still trying to claim that term to describe themselves, and that other self-described anarchists seem poorly equipped to disprove that claim. I will quite now from the Anarchist FAQ: "Anarcho"-capitalists claim to be anarchists because they say that they oppose government. As such, as noted in the last section, they use a dictionary definition of anarchism. However, this fails to appreciate that anarchism is a political theory, not a dictionary definition. As dictionaries are rarely politically sophisticated things, this means that they fail to recognise that anarchism is more than just opposition to government, it is also marked a opposition to capitalism (i.e. exploitation and private property). Thus, opposition to government is a necessary but not sufficient condition for being an anarchist -- you also need to be opposed to exploitation and capitalist private property. As "anarcho"-capitalists do not consider interest, rent and profits (i.e. capitalism) to be exploitative nor oppose capitalist property rights, they are not anarchists. ---- Read more at: geocities.com/CapitolHill/1931/secF1.html - What I find interesting about this thread, though, is the discussion of "Free-Money", or non-government regulated currency. As some of you might know, I am currently engaged in planning the Alternative Economics Summit for the 8th of November, which will be at DePaul University. -------

> Jake Witmer writes: quote: If anarcho-syndicalists wish to make my method of trading obsolete, they are welcome to try, so long as they use no force. If they can convince the world to give up cash, money, or other symbols of work, more power to them, they are vastly better communicators than I am. But the second they use force to achieve their ends, they are just another government, because that's what government does: it is a group that collectively forces individuals to behave a certain way. ------

I must agree with his position. Anarchists cannot be totalitarian -- that is, conditionally exclusive of all other ideologies. That would be hypocritical. Besides, I like having friends who are socialists, libertarians, nihilists, and other liberal/lefty types. At the same time, if you're not an anarchist, then don't use the "anarcho" prefix when labelling yourself unless to deliberately give a false impression. If you're a Libertarian, fine, you're a libertarian. Anarchists stopped calling themselves libertarian socialists in the fifties when the Libertarian Party was created (or whenever it was, I don't recall exactly). Once a word becomes an ideology, then the greek or latin roots simply become misleading.

The Wall Street Performer Protocol: Using Software Completion

> Bonds To Fund Open Source Software Development Introduction In their article "The Street Performer Protocol and Digital Copyrights" (Kelsey and Schneier, 1999) suggest that copyright will become increasingly difficult to enforce. They propose a general mechanism for funding digital public works, the "Street Performer Protocol" in which the authors produce the work only after they receive enough contributions to make it worth their while. In this article, I sketch out a proposal for the creation of a software completion bond market. I think such a market would be a practical implementation of the "Street Performer Protocol" for the funding of open source software. I first describe how such a bond market might work, and why I think the open source community needs a bond market. Then I examine the underlying economics of open source software. Finally, I review some of the existing and potential alternatives to a software completion bond market. -------

Autonomous pockets of resistance within the territorial borders creates visible dissent. If the opposition is always "out there" or "over there" people can disassociate themselves from the crimes of the US governing body. Liberation for all not more division. -------------- About secession greg 11:49am Thu Nov 7 '02 comment#215627 Having autonomous states is certainly preferable to a large centralized one, however there are problems. You dont want to have a situation where capital can pit states against each other, something like what they are doing now with globalization, where they move investment to only those countries that have the shittiest labor standards and pollution control, and punish those states that try to provide a decent standard of living to their own people. States can and will be pitted against each other by the capitalists. Secession is fine but not the answer unless the issue of rampant capitalism is addressed as well. I think we would be best served not to have states at all, but only townships where capital is under control of workers locally, and the where politicians can be more carefully watched. --------------

An honest look at "After the Cataclysm", the main book where Chomsky comments on Cambodia, shows Chomsky using dubious sources to try to show that the Khmer Rouge were more like the Vietnamese Communists than genocidal maniacs. His whole shtick on Cambodia is done in the service of justifying his defense of post war Vietnamn elsewhere in the book, apparantly on the theory that if Cambodia was shown to be hell then the critics would be proved right about the danger of Communism in Southeast Asia. It's a chapter which miraculously says much without marshalling anything other than secondary facts. He dismisses refuge accounts talking about life in Cambodia, for example. There's a stupendous unwillingness to recognize what happened in Cambodia as anything other than a Vietnam style revolution that killed a few more people. Why was this composted? -------------- I wrote it anonymous 9:30am Thu Nov 28 '02 comment#36001 I wrote this article and am shocked and saddened that it got composted. I spent hours writing this "original material" (the 20 questions), not to mention the original Portland IMC logo parody. I guess when you write original material that bashes men you get front page feature, but if you write original material to defend yourself against feminists you get composted. Double standard? Could it be the questions hit too hard? Can Portland IMC not stand a little "culture jamming" back at them? Why was this composted? Hopefully Portland Indymedia editorial will set things right... ------------- men need defending?! GRINGO STARS 1:31pm Thu Nov 28 '02 gringo_stars@attbi.com comment#36022 Why do men need defending? What with all their fearsome power. Some men can take a "bashing" because we don't all identify with typical measures of manliness. I'm not perfect, no one is, but I don't feel threatened when a woman wants to reason out WHY so many men act the way they do. Emma makes some excellent points. Deal with it. Don't be a marooooooon, "anonymous." ------------ i agree it should be UNcomposted Another indymedia volunteer 1:50pm Thu Nov 28 '02 comment#36025 I agree that it shouldn't've been composted. the question of uncomposting it has been put before other indymedia volunteers for discussion. expect action one way or another sometime today. ------------ Gringo's got it another kinda star 10:50pm Thu Nov 28 '02 comment#36058 I don't agree with everything Gringo Stars submits to this website, and sometimes don't like his tone or choice of words, but he's absolutely right here. The author of the so-called interview questions just babbled and insulted and didn't have anything useful to say. BTW, "feminazi" is a right-wing Limbaugh type word. That choice right there tells us what kind of place the author is coming from: close-mindedness. Take your toys and go home, "anonymous". --------------- Good job, editors Southeaster 11:27pm Thu Nov 28 '02 comment#36066 You put this post right where it belongs. Pedestal Jennifer Garnish 2:42am Mon Dec 2 '02 address: LA comment#36477 While I agree with much of what Emma has to say, I disagree with her being placed on a pedestal by Indymedia or anyone as the voice of feminism; along those egotistical, herd-instinct lines, it is inevitable that when you are put up there (and I did not notice Emma objecting), someone is going to try and knock you off. While some of Anonymous' Feminazi ranting and graphics are in poor taste, I disagree with Indymedia coddling the vistors to this site like children and censoring certain words, ideas, graphics because someone might be offended or hurt. That is furthering the dead politics of victimhood, and is not the least bit empowering to anyone. All in all, I have enjoyed watching the spirited discussion unfold. On a final note, the Feminazi thing is truly moronic but it is a talk-radio-reaction to the Male Chauvinist Pig label that preceded it. As ye sow, so shall ye reap. And a divided house will fall and fail. The powers that be want us to keep up the infighting along gender, class, race, religious and political lines. In conclusion, we are all in this together. With compassion first, we must handle our growing pains and disagreements. If you know I have compassion for you, your voice, and honor your being, then my criticism is immediately blunted. And less self-righteous and self-absorbed. ------------ LIKE A FISH NEEDS A BICYCLE bicycle 11:53am Mon Dec 2 '02 comment#36504 Name calling is ignorant. It is a knee jerk response to variety. article#220169 New Underground Comic about Jewish Power, Jewish Hypocrisy, and Israel --- Jewish Tribal Review 2:16pm Sun Dec 1 '02 New comic strip entitled "The Adventures of Rabbi Rabbit" that lampoons what cries out to be satirized, but all fear. Announcing a new cartoon series, The Adventures of Rabbi Rabbit, that asks the questions you've been waiting to hear. All Jewish/Zionist hypocrisies to be laid bare. jewishtribalreview.org/carrara.htm - THE ADVENTURES OF RABBI RABBIT The following cartoons are satire, and social and political criticism. No one, and no thing, is justifiably beyond a poke of criticism. (Witness the avalanche of jokes even about Catholic priests and sex, or the Pope, these days). Although open joking about Jewish identity, conventions and institutions by non-Jewish commentators are typically pathologized as manifestations of "antisemitism," Jewish comics themselves relentlessly contribute to the very Jewish form of "antisemitism," popularly understood in the Jewish community as the genre of "Jewish self-hatred." Jews endlessly lambast "nagging Jewish mothers," "Jewish American Princesses," and a treasure trove of neurotic Jewish traits (Woody Allen's endlessly laughable self-examinations as a Jew are a well-known case in point). Such humor, within the Jewish community, is a well-known institution. "All kinds of deception and cunning, of fraud and trickery, devised and committed by Jews, either to get money or to avoid paying money," wrote prominent Jewish psychoanalyst Theodore Reik, "are exposed and candidly revealed by Jewish jokes." Gay Sheep Are Born That Way - Nature not Nurture by baa baa 7:18am Mon Nov 11 '02 Homosexuality is biological, suggests gay sheep study Homosexuality is biological, suggests gay sheep study http://www.newscientist.com/news/news.jsp?id=ns99993008 10:51 05 November 02 NewScientist.com news service A study of gay sheep appears to confirm the controversial suggestion that there is a biological basis for sexual preference. The work shows that rams that prefer male sexual partners had small but distinct differences in a part of the brain called the hypothalamus, when compared with rams that preferred to mate with ewes. Kay Larkin and colleagues from Oregon Health and Science University found the difference was in a particular region of the hypothalamus - the preoptic nucleus. SNIP ---------- Baaaaa by QueerSheep 9:00am Mon Nov 11 '02 As a gay identified female-to-male transgendered sheep, I am deeply offended by this newest piece of "junk science." I chose my sexual orientation in the same way that I chose my gender identity, through a great personal struggle that took me from a journey of self-loathing to one of self-acceptance and pride. If anything, I rebelled against my "genetic" predisposition. I am proud of my self-creation as a transgendered female-to-male. I am proud of my chosen sexual orientation (gay male). > Posted on Tue, Nov. 26, 2002 Recycling solutions for PCs are limited and face obstacles By Karl Schoenberger Mercury News ROSEVILLE About 41 million PCs became obsolete this year in the United States. How to prevent environmental harm and health risks associated with the end of life of these products is a knotty problem confronting the electronics industry. --|--State and federal lawmakers are proposing legislation to support domestic recycling. Smart Sweden's TCO and Germany's Blue Angel, but it hasn't caught on in the United States. -||- Deregulating the e-waste supply chain - For $13 to $30, depending on the type and quantity of equipment, HP comes to the customer's doorstep and carts off any brand of old computer. - Apple Computer has been a laggard in its take-back program, critics say. Indeed, HP CEO Carly Fiorina recently pledged in writing that the company ``does not export any discarded products or waste materials.'' Yet HP recycles only a tiny portion of the mounting volume of e-waste --|-- At the U.S. High Security Penitentiary in Atwater, about 100 miles south of Roseville in the San Joaquin Valley, prisoners are cracking open computers in an air-conditioned warehouse for $1 an hour, standard pay for federal inmates volunteering for work. The recycling is done under EPA guidelines, but Occupational Safety and Health Administration regulations do not apply to prison labor. --|-- Studies have found that the lead content of the glass shielding on the tubes leaches into groundwater. --||-- The smart solution to handling e-waste is to design products that don't contain toxic chemicals in the first place, and make them easier and safer to take apart during recycling, some electronics companies and their critics agree. And industry is very interested in avoiding bad press.''

And if that's not proof enough (a shame on me for ever believing swapping wind- for computerscreens would do people good and get'm on the way back to be(com)ing all-rounders), that digitalia is going too far and the virtues of mixing incongrualia is an art it itself with quite the opposite of poisoning effects, here's Wojtek (LBO-talker): It is not about just talking, but about TV being an agent of socialization, or rather its influence relative to other agents of socialization (especially parents and community). My argument was that because the effect of the latter is relatively weak in the US, the effect of the former is relatively stronger. Consider, for example, a crime report on TV. That message can be either balanced by a negative feedabck or reinforced by a positive feedback a viewer receives from his/her community. In case of a mixed, cohesive community (such as those found in Europe) the chances are that the message will be balanced out by variety of opinions voiced by different community members. In a seggregated, mono-cultural community that is the norm here, that message will probably receive a positive reinforcement, because such communities consist of people who tend to think and act alike.

The same may apply to other media and messages, such as video games or even books. When I was in the 6th grade (back in Poland), I read my first crime novel (the title and the plot escapes me now, but it was something about blackmail) and I was very eager to pull a similar trick in my school. However, my peers were not so eager, so my budding criminal career did not have a chance progress very far. Now imagine a situation where peer communities are formed not based on social and geographic proximity, but based on individual choices and interests. In such a situation, my peers would be those who think and act like me (cf. folks who formed a Trenchcoat Mafia in Columbine High) and I would be very likely to receive a positive feedback in my plans. ------- If you want another spin on this situation, consider what Paul Krugman has to say about the effects of positive feedback on geographic concentration of industry. If it holds true for one form of human activity (pursuit of profit) it certainly holds for other (such as delinquency and violent behavior).

I'm waiv*(er)*ing off with Dan Winter's take on signs as such thusly:

J. Walter Plinge reviewing Tom Greco's Money ---------- review of Money by Suzanne Phillips ...official money malfunctions in three ways: It is kept artificially scarce; it is misallocated at its source; and it systemically pumps wealth from other classes to the rich through "the debt trap.

" The "Banksters" The revelations in Big Brother Files #34 about the operations of the World Bank/IMF are mind-boggling. These institutions, however, are "only the tip of the iceberg" - an increasingly popular phrase these days. The whole banking system, as operated for centuries, is set up to favor its wealthy owners and impoverish the rest of us. I want to call your readers' attention to a newly-published book on the subject by Thomas H. Greco, Jr - Money: Understanding and Creating Alternatives to Legal Tender.

Using the U.S. as an example, this remarkable book does two things. It tells us how the banking system works, and offers practical solutions enabling communities to take back control of their lives. Greco, an MBA, former business professor and entrepreneur, has spent 30 years on both sides of these prime issues. He says official money malfunctions in three ways: It is kept artificially scarce; it is misallocated at its source; and it systemically pumps wealth from other classes to the rich through "the debt trap." We need to fully grasp the fact that the primary way money (both currency and credit) comes into existence is through debt.

---------- The debt trap.

Banks are legally allowed to charge interest (which in this case is usury because the money doesn't yet exist), and also to confiscate your collateral if you are can't repay the loan. The standard practice of foreclosing mortgages on farms or houses sends people to work as 'wage slaves.' But this is the least of the damage. Intertwining of private banks and central governments and their mutual dependence gives banks far-reaching power over our quality of life. "In return for its privileged position, the banking cartel must assure that the central government is able to borrow and spend virtually any amount of money it wishes. The banking system, despite its public rhetoric about the importance of fiscal responsibility, will always 'float' the necessary budget deficits of the central government, by 'monetizing' the debt." What this means is that the banking system will create enough new money to allow the market to absorb the new government bonds that must be issued to finance the deficit. Thus, it allows the government to spend as much as it wishes without raising taxes directly. Says Greco, "The primary cause of inflation is the issuance of money on the basis of ever increasing debts of central governments, which they are unable to repay." "The most destructive aspect of this almost limitless power to spend is that, as E.C. Riegel has written 'it permits ambitious or designing or fanatical men who are in control of government to light the fires of war'. If government were required first to come to the people to obtain the money to fight, there would be few if any wars." It is increasingly evident that the U.S. government is beholden to corporations. This has special dangers in regard to banks.

Publisher's Summary of the book by the founder thereof Dee Hock:

Written by the founder of VISA, the largest business enterprise on earth, with 22,000 member institutions worldwide, 750 million customers, and $1.25 trillion in transactions annually. Visionary yet pragmatic ideas about the nature of money, information, organization, and community, and hope for a better future in an increasingly complex and troubled world. A rare commodity—a book by a corporate CEO actually written in its entirety by that CEO, with no ghostwriter. Dee Hock is a gifted and literate writer with a great story to tell. Skillfully weaving together the story of how VISA International was conceived and founded with his own life story and a dose of visionary management philosophy, Hock shows that there is a clear need to reconceive long-held notions of institutional organization and offers a glimpse into the possibilities for the future. According to Hock, the bright light on the horizon is that the past few decades have seen the emergence of opportunities for complex groups to interconnect in ways that would have been difficult to imagine forty or fifty years ago. Showing that these new chaordic ways of organization are not just theoretical or utopian, Hock points out that they represent a way of thinking that has been demonstrated in groups that exist now, are successfully achieving their purpose, and give us exciting evidence of the possibilities. ----

> * I have to believe old Kinch (James Joyce) would have enjoyed the word google, with its first consonant and vowel tending toward the creator, and ending in giggle and ogle. Couldn't the Internet be seen as the technological integument connecting humanity's waking mind with a universal oversoul? Or maybe reconnection of, or a second attempt at a tower of babel, but with a little more hard science in it than in its Babylonion predecessor? In any case, I have to believe that Joyce would have rejoiced in it, even if it sent him back to the drawing board for new metaphors. -----------------

I go: the trouble with you middle of the road kinspirecysts is that the excellent and sharp anal oozes are all the more morbid the longer you postpone and as readers find out, in the end even leave out all (any, even mere hints at, solutions altogether); thanks but no thanks. So it is unrealistic to expect and point the way to a miracle mootamorph, mindchange whatlabelhaveya; a sample: the viciousness you refer to is going to pan out as mere speculation on the gold market, troop excercise in places where they don't trample so many flowers and defiant answer and taunt for the accomplice/terrorist Bin Burdened who may after all be instructed by US speechwriters. ---- God knows the middle east needs a lotta manpower but I am afraid the equipment is indeed horribly inappropriate. Maybe they could set up some factories converting all their hardware into the sorts that help regreen the place. Even if knowbody buys my heirbraynd proposal now it will withstand the collective compostby date as long as warparaphernalia keep on existing.

> 40612 Portland IndyA speech by Lloyd Marbet before The Spiritual City Club -- --------- making people (not corporations) sovereign GRINGO STARS 1:26am Sat Jan 11 '03 gringo_stars@attbi.com comment#40614 Paul Cienfuegos is an activist with a keen sense of the way political power really works. I am convinced that, as far as reformist tactics go, taking power away from corporations and making people sovereigns is the best way to go. Corporate personhood must be reversed. Corporate free-speech should be outlawed as the false advertising that it is. There are numerous links to good articles concerning these valid tactics at Cienfuegos' site: http://www.monitor.net/democracyunlimited/

-----CIRCUMCISION AND SHE MEMERY ------------ depthdipped basebreadthed staturesteeped now piet 2:27am Sat Jan 11 '03 comment#40615 The right wing argument often heard that lame spongers should get a job instead of expecting hard workers to subsidize their lazy ways is false. It leaves out the classes of people not yet and no longer able to pull the cart. If democracy would like to claim ability to sustain levels of productivity (inclusive of the myriad of beings completely void of voice human or otherwise), iow, those that factually and numerically constitute the majority in the chain of beings that/from which we are at least as expendable as we all too often like to think others are, then consider this: google up poetpiet And now, to the deeper causes of simpliduction to dominuisance issues ----- Circumcision is a very ancient mimic of magic menses, one of the first fraudulent and hostile take overs, archaic atavistic usurpations of the peculiarly feminine prerogative to bleed naturally followed by further tricks to control family ties, to tame and get women (possesed) and patriarchy off to a start. Unfortunately, not to stem, but as it turns out, aggravate the already out of control 'differs creating' yet beggaring the oneness [at once and best] illusion, fixation on life's hilites, the ones that shatter and create identities, put'm under the bane of one taboo after another .. with the transitions being no less painful than the cause for imposing them in the first placel. Such shortsightedness took on a life of it's own, or rather that and those of others in so far (very) as agression 'gan to become single most isolatory specialism. She knowed not she had it in her, and then not to have it in her but she can't owe up to putting it out there let alone stop. At first it all seemed well worth the trouble and non-potty trainage to her at worst, and then growed well over her head, last we heard she and her gender enjoyce silence exile and cunning indeed. Aren't we thus well on our way towards denuding motherhood? aren't we socializing into a central insectoid mass society that co-opts, concentrates and on the other hand still further disowns females from their fecundity. Ignorance of truly Maerthian magnitude must have triggered this blowback and ricochet of 'success'. And on and onwards does the hunt for security lead US to amass hysterical and fake fortifications. The media are our collective conscience but a rock ain't necessarily in a state of rigor mortis very long, specially if it's already basking in the light of the sun; I for one am all for granting the lowliest states and classes of being some offspring; broaden thy base if you care to sport a backyard with some depth. incomprehensible passage above improved piet 4:09am Sat Jan 11 '03 comment------- #40618 well,. . . slightly anyways <<<incorporated above>>>> poetpiet.tripod.com

Makhno 9:24am Sat Jan 11 '03 comment#40630 Laws, laws, and more high priests. Governments will kill us all and murder the earth. Organise or you will have government. ------ A retort for the Right Wing - by FotW 3:47pm Sat Jan 11 '03 comment#40653 When you hear the right wing argument that lame spongers should get a job instead of expecting hard workers to subsidize their lazy ways, point out the following. The unemployment rate is one of the most important economic factors for determining federal intrest rates. If unemployment gets very low, the intrest rates are raised until unemployment rises again. How can you demonize the unemployed in a country who's economic system guarantees that a certain percentage of its people will always be unemployed.

---- answer: no lefty 1:20am Sun Jan 12 '03 comment#40682 Answer: Your logic is flawed, and you are "splitting the premise", a long time leftist debate fallacy. Of course there should be a safety net in place for those unfortunates who fall on hard luck. But, the vast majority of welfare does indeed flow from the pockets of people who actually pay taxes, to the mouthes of people who do not, who have children that they are incapable of supporting, who make poor choices on how to spend the money that they do have, and who show absolutely no incentive towards changing their lives, in order to benefit corrupt Democrats who have never lived amongst the working classes they lionize, to guarantee the votes of these people, and thus political power. It's ugly, it's painful, but it is a fact. And I'm no silver spoon, either. Believe me, I know how it feels to hate and be jealous of rich people. I come from a trailer park, was fed government cheese, and have been homeless. I eventually learned how to delay gratification, and now have a little money stored away for when the bad times inevitably come. It's not the grand overarching economic theory that I am emphasizing, but rather the personal responsibility and commmon sense. The "intrest" rates are a RESPONSE to a situation, and even part of the cycle you are pointing out, but not the cause. It's a non sequiter. And, yes, a certian percentage of the population will always be unemployed. It is human nature. Many people are stupid and lazy, and politicians, both "left" and "right", realize this, and use it to great advantage. The only place in the world that has ever been brazen enough to claim that no one was unemployed there was the USSR, where the millions of people who luckily escaped cannibalism, slave labor, or industrial poisoning lived in total squalor and routinely drank cologne and mouthwash to dull the pain of moldy bread on an empty stomach. Hyperbole ? Talk to one of Portland's many Russian immigrants about Socialism and organized crime sometime. It's highly informative. ---------- a RealPlayer doc on the challenger piet 1:39am Mon Jan 27 '03 a great documentary (mostly in English) on the challenger of Sharon available in RealPlayer from a Dutch broad*(band)*casting company/co-operative, the VPRO: http://info.vpro.nl/rmstreams.db?10352264 or for smallband: http://info.vpro.nl/rmstreams.db?10352265 This is a must see, pass it on. Salient points from this program (which will be repeated vrijdag 31 januari 2003 15:00): Children in the settlements grow up warped and shellshocked. Mitzna has gotten the better of Sharon once before, post Sabra and Chattila debacle, Mitzna spoke up and instead of being fired Sharon lost his ministry of Defense post. He must be given a chance to make all of Israel like Haifa where he is mayor, he says to negotiate like there is no terrorism and to fight terrorism uncompromisingly. Mitzna does want to leave the occupied territories and put up a fence. My comment: Consciously applied schizofrenia, I like it. He is holding up a mirror for his people to see that a dream of greater israel is not much more modest than calling themselves the chosen people destined to be numerous like a beach's sand, so much entitled to forever overflow borders that it is not any use to build any even after having been beaten severely the ancient creep began almost instantly and it's not malicious to say it never even stopped. The maker of the documentary is very aware that Amram M is battling ghosts and baggage from the last century (Holocaust etc), this is a people infected and fighting for dear life (acting out, mimicking and spreading the infection!) instead of being kept safe till the crisis is over, they are healed and ready for what has now been given to them prematurely. About the much much older demons some more: Short (and instead of being in need) of helping hands to implement solutions a la http://www.bioneers.org (in order to regreen the deserts beginning with the middle east and with the USarmy equipment conversion), we are witnessing a prolonged, resumed, and intensifying world class INCONTINENT DEMOGRAPHY CONTEST in the Middle east, as if there aren't enough deserts, elbow room squabbles and Shem vs Shaun polarizations already. The reasons for such behaviours are obvious and archaic, safety in numbers and desire for power, insecurity guided quests for such. Abdication of the expansionist portions of our urges frequently ups the pressures for inverse directions, like in China. The stratifications, babylonicopilings and all that go on there at great cost to 'other' and looked down upon but really misjudged, unheeded, belittled and scorned co-life forms just the same. :: : --:: X ::-- : ::

Translated excerpts from the introductory text in Dutch http://info.vpro.nl/info/tegenlicht/index.shtml ?7738514+7738518+7738520+10216882 Amram Mitzna became labour leader in the space of 3 months.

The introduction by the maker makes clear he sees no essential difference between Arafat and Sharon (both us or them kinda people). He feels hopeful that somebody who was the highest commander during the first Intifada is willing to leave the most and only comfortable position in Israel and stick his neck out once again.

hi, are you studying in south italy yet? You told me about it as I hitched a ride with you and your friend after your little holiday, remember? I stood at the parma toll gate till late at night and had to take shelter during a drenching shower. Then I decided to sleep on the porch of a closed restaurant across a closed parking lot. Next morning I experienced great luck GREAT luck. Somebody going to the Locarno film festival took me all the way there and I spent the rest of the day with him, after that I wandered off and slept in a park there, walking to the neighbouring village of Ascona where a big hotel now sits at the gorgeous site once occupied by one of the first hippy communes called Monte Verita, parts of which are preserved as museumlike settings, such as a dwelling which much resembles the one I live in now, and conferences on it held there. I am now in Amsterdam but would like to move into the countryside somewhere, I just don't know where exactly yet. Hope you and your friend are fine. Piet ----------------

I go: Self absorption no problem IF SELF-SUFFICIENT France is full of arabs; Chirac would be crazy to wave his hand and say go ahead even if many dutch political commentators expect him to give such a go ahead at the last moment. You have no idea how much havoc arabs already create, the petty terrorism adds up to horrendous damage as it is (see Theodore Dalrymple's piece on paris). I think the debate is a good idea but I doubt it will happen. If only 'America' (could overpower it's powerhungry and) would airdrop flyers with cleartext about the prospects for both ordinary and sadam people; saying things like: those found guilty of having given orders to stifle dissent will spared but put to forced labour. 'America' should explicitly admit it's guilt about failing the Kurds and southerners after setting them up and encouraging revolt; 'it' must state the present aim is to make up for that and do so by quietly marching a giant ground force into those areas from all directions, that would half Sadam's power right there and spur bagdad into revolt, perhaps after smuggling lots of small arms into it. Promise to help make the area a federation of states, at least 3 and restore the marsh delta, etc, etc --- piet 10:38am Tue Feb 25 '03 comment#240141

> "Having studied the relationship between the brain, cells and emotions," he told Joseph Duggan in Vancouver, "I came to realize that certain trace elements were needed to send information from one area of the brain to another." Minerals alone could not convey information. To find out if the carrier was water itself, Dr. Schweitzer experimented. French scientist Jacques Bienveniste had already shed light on the memory of water in homeopathy. He and a dozen other scientists demonstrated that water can retain a memory of molecules it once contained. Nature magazine in 1988 published their experiments showing that if water containing antibodies was diluted repeatedly until it no longer contained a single molecule of antibody, immune cells still respond to the water. The publication drew outrage from orthodox professors, and the magazine later sent a team to Benveniste's laboratory including the magician James Randi and Walter Stewart, a self-appointed investigator of scientific fraud. The team judged the French scientists' results to be a "delusion." However, a recent book by Michel Schiff says the slander of Benveniste was the delusion.

> Flavor Analysis: The Samurai School of Appliantology? Yes, and it's a wonderful school. The Samurai Appliance Repair Man runs a blog that gives appliance tips, instructions, humor, news and much, much more. This site has everything. The design is a refreshing throwback to something from the mid-90s, refusing to conform to the traditional blog templates that so boringly populate much of the Web. For a while I wasn't sure this site was a real appliance site or just some extremely clever parody but I'm now convinced that it is, in fact, genuine. It is just so infused with tongue-in-cheek humor that it can easily be mistaken for an appliance humor site (if those exist). The really cool thing is that the information is great. This is how an appliance site should be. Not too serious but chock full of information. Scott has found an excellent way to utilize blogs in a non-traditional way and incorporate the blogging methods into his larger site. URL: fixitnow.com/

The elfers find their justification in just this part of reasoning, though it's only good for drawing (nevertheless much needed) attention to a problem in the ol' eye for an eye fashion, sure as ever to escalate and ravish life far beyond contestants (perps, victims and champions alike). Animals are gullible, easily duped, quite like humans in fact. Can't even really say that they are more so (look at the bees and ants). So it is not fair or more verifiable than not to say they would never abuse it as massively and opaquely hierarchical as humans do. Not on that ground could Orwell's 'animal farm' and the little known but in my opinion better (besides much more massive) Maarten Toonder's work *(spanning decades of illustrated animal farm type stories)*be called unfair. But what is decidedly different is the organicity and inoffensiveness to biology of animal behaviour; I like to think animal bioindustry receives the punishment of miniaturization, nature's way of literal belittlement; I think japan as the world's oldest island culture is showing signs of such anaemia. --------- Human's are reckless and inconsiderate on a massive scale though. > ?????? edge.org Home About Edge Features Edge Editions Press The Reality Club Third Culture Digerati Edge Search Edge 114— April 28, 2003 (6,800 words) WHY DO SOME SOCIETIES MAKE DISASTROUS DECISIONS?: JARED DIAMOND What I'm going to suggest is a road map of factors in failures of group decision making. I'll divide the answers into a sequence of four somewhat fuzzily delineated categories. First of all, a group may fail to anticipate a problem before the problem actually arrives. Secondly, when the problem arrives, the group may fail to perceive the problem. Then, after they perceive the problem, they may fail even to try to solve the problem. Finally, they may try to solve it but may fail in their attempts to do so. While all this talking about reasons for failure and collapses of society may seem pessimistic, the flip side is optimistic: namely, successful decision-making. Perhaps if we understand the reasons why groups make bad decisions, we can use that knowledge as a check list to help groups make good decisions. The more widely noted state of the un as a debating society deadlocked into proposals to alleviate the most troubled spot consistently vetoed by the us in favor of israel should weigh heavier though. I don't think the argument of pro-israeli about other areas, purportedly in equal trouble holds water at all in most cases, Kurds, chechens and a host of others excepted of course. > ----------- I have news for you, Piet by Mike 1:53pm Thu May 8 '03 stepbystepfarm@shaysnet.com The reality is that SOME "genetic engineering" goes way back. See, in order to get "crosses" between species that are too far separated (genetically) it may be necessary to dounle the chromosone number. This SOMETIMES happens naturally and probably is what enabled our distant ancestors to produce crops like corn (maize). And there other food plants where we are unsure of where they came from (no wild version known). But also there are NATURAL substances, think of them as "herbal drugs" which tend to induce "chromosone doubling". One of them is the active ingredient in "autumn crocus" -- a Mediteranean native long used to treat gout. Luther Burbank used it for chromosone doubling -- though of course back in his day they had no idea WHY treating the previous generation of plants you wished to cross allowed "impossible" crosses to work. It was just a trick flower breeders knwe about.

> "There seems to be a theme in Tim Dunlop's writing, and even more so in Gary Sauer-Thompson and Rob Schaap, which conclusively regards the missionary zeal of the so-called "neo-cons" to engender liberal democratic values in autocratic states as per se illegitimate. Rob even appears to see liberal democracy as merely one possible choice, no more nor less valid than any other (including, presumably, a fundamentalist islamic state), and any overt attempt to promote it as imperialist. This strikes me as taking existentialist or post-modern relativism to patently absurd extremes. Core liberal values, especially protection of minorities, are derivable by logical process reasonably independent of any particular cultural milieu. Kant's Categorical Imperative and John Rawls' Veil of Ignorance both make reasonably convincing (though not unassailable) arguments in that direction." ---

I must appear before you, m'lud, on behalf of my buns alone. Re: THE LIBERAL DEMOCRATIC ZEAL POINT The decisive difference between Ken and me here is not that I am against liberal democracy, but that I look at my history books and conclude that the neocons never really thought this could be done (not as cheaply and quickly as required and not at MOAB-point, anyway), and therefore that they never really meant that stuff. > Roger Williams (1603-1683) The son of a merchant tailor and friend of poet John Milton, Roger Williams was banished from Massachusetts in 1635 because of his pro views on democracy and religious equality. He was an early critic of imperialism, believing that America belonged to the Indians. Williams went on to establish a colony at Rhode Island that welcomed people of all religions. Among Williams' many books is one of the first phrase books of Indian language called A Key Into the Languages of America, published in 1643. The book was an early ethnography, providing descriptions of Indian culture based on Williams' experiences living with different tribes. Williams wrote mostly in favor of strong democratic principles and religious liberty, including his most celebrated work, The Bloody Tenet of Persecution for Cause of Conscience (1644). Williams followed this pamphlet with The Bloody Tenent Yet More Bloody in 1652. Stockton has six reference books on Williams including Perry Miller's "Roger Williams: His Contributions to the American Tradition"; Clark Gilpin's "The Millenarian Piety of Roger Williams"; and Cyclone Covey's "The Gentle Radical: A Biography of Roger Williams." In addition to some of these, Williams' A Key Into the Languages of America is essential to Stockton's library as a unique and insightful ethnography. Stockton is well stocked on journal articles on Williams. Authors who have written articles that Stockton carries are Anne Keary (Narragansett Bay), Jack Davis (Narragansett Indians), David Lovejoy (self-righteousness), Jesper Rosenmeier (John Cotton and Roger Williams), Theodore Bozeman (religious liberty), and Leonard Vraniak (intersections of genre).

> The December 1999 issue of The Ancient American made me very sad. It featured a lead-story entitled, "An Ancient North African Treasure-Trove in Southern Illinois (Joseph 'Collin' 1999)." The cover announced "Hebrews in 1st Century Illinois," an idea which must have appealed to the magazine's Mormon publisher, as well as many of its Mormon readers. Joe Smith (the author of the Book of Mormon) was murdered in Illinois in 1844, and Mormon doctrine holds that ancient Hebrews sailed to the New World. The story told by Joseph 'Collin' combined theories of Al the Great by The Kids (Schaffranke 'Kelly' 1997) and Cyclone Covey's speculation about King Juba (Covey 1997; 1998), yet no credit is shared. And, most disturbingly, Joseph 'Collin' draws attention to various items alleged to have been removed from Burrows' Cave which he believes depict blacks who had undergone "ritual scarificaton." Jews, blacks, and Illinois? Written by one of America's most infamous neo-Nazis? In a publication put out by a Mormon? Right. It's a coincidence...--- end quote ----------- another: As the twentieth anniversary of the Burrows' Cave hoax nears, skepticism remains a whisper in a room filled with loud-mouthed believers and con-men. The continuation of the hoax and its real threat of becoming an inextricable bit of contemporary American folklore (like Elvis sightings), is due to the laziness of academics, professionals, and officials who could have long ago exposed the fraud and demonstrated the recent manufacture of the items. A cave? Go read Plato. The only cave Burrows discovered was in his mind. It should begin and end with the thousands of items Burrows claims he removed from a cave, but it doesn't. The items are modern and Burrows is a liar. If scholars like Cyclone Covey and the late Joe Mahan see a validation of their own diffusionist efforts in the Burrows' Cave items, it shouldn't matter, as the items are modern and Burrows is a liar.--- end Q ----- one more (from part 1): I'd spoken with several who'd purchased inscribed stones from Burrows, and all were ...not that smart. Sorry; but it's a case of the classic "a fool and his money are soon parted" thing. Some believers in the claims of Burrows and a "cave," as well as the authenticity of the inscribed stones as being from antiquity, became convinced independently and early on, such as Virginia Hourigan (Hourigan 1987; Burrows and Rydholm 1992, Sections 34-36 and 38-41), while others switched over to the "Dark Side" after Ward and Burrows' talk at ISAC in 1988. Cyclone Covey, professor emeritus of history at Wake Forest College and author of Calalus, a book which argues for an ancient Roman-Jewish presence in Arizona (Covey 1975), was, and remains, a dedicated believer.

PIET: so, . .. that mean you don't care from how far away your food has travelled to come 'feed' 'you'??????

> ------- 'ME': I don't understand you. Why would what I said mean THAT? Anyway, most of my food comes from local farmers' markets. It's cheaper, easier, better-tasting; there's more variety; it's better for the environment. I'm lucky: 80 to 90 percent of my food comes from with 100 miles of where I live. The average American consumer's food travels (I think) 1300 miles. --------

PIET: wrong; autonomy indepence, bioregionalism, preponderance of voluntary (revocable) and creative protcolling and federation, enough demographic restraint to allow all-beings lands (as opposed to no-mans ones) are eminently panarchic domains and principles. -------

ME: No, not wrong...just not the whole story. What you say is true in some ways, what I said is true in others. Tribalism isn't just bioregionalism and autonomy; it's also selfishness, racial hatred, land disputes, religious factionalism, and even football hooliganism. It's not "either/or," it's "both/and": tribalism can be both an aid to AND an obstacle against lasting anarchism. The same goes for extreme individualism. --------

PIET: Ayn Rand a 'windbag'??? the old gal's Atlas shrugged (coopted by overblown macho jerkery like the matrix's) pulled me across the line (literally translated expression meaning making one decide) of returning for another state side visit (keeping my green card, which I never did have much use for, alive).-------

'ME': That's fine for you. Personally, I don't like her stilted writing or her barely original ideas (Plato said most of it first and said it better, too...but it was still blood-curdling for anyone with humanist or democratic notions). Like most "either/or" people, she invents false dichotomies in order to exalt herself and demean her opponents. If collectivism is anti-life insanity, as she argues...and she's against collectivism...then anyone who stands against her MUST be pro-death and pro-madness, right? A good way to win every argument! --------

PIET: no, not as with Nietzsche, he had an expanded one, even stretched it beyond popping point; -------

'ME': I can't tell if you're saying he's worse or better than I think he is. I don't care what Nietzsche thought about himself; in his daily life, he was a pretty pathetic specimen...sickly, weak, timid, and scared to death of women (which resulted in--surprise!--misogyny). "Women are meant for the recreation of the warrior," he once wrote...easy enough to say when you were never a soldier and died a virgin! In some ways, he's sort of a prototype of some US chickenhawks, eh? Everyone knows he died crazy; not so many people notice that he LIVED crazy. I'll admit he had quite an imagination...and as such he's been a good role model for people who do most of their living in their heads. But I wasn't talking about HIS personality, anyway. I was talking about the personalities of people who admire him. There's not much fun in reading about how great the Ubermensch is unless you want to be one, or consider yourself one already! This is just an off-the-cuff sneer and not the final word on a complicated subject...but it's also not totally without validity, in my experience. It's funny...one "advantage" the Right has over all of us is uniformity of thought and influences. Not only do we have a hard time agreeing, but we sometimes base our philosophies on some pretty shaky ideas that can just as easily justify colonialism or fascism or what have you. The Right is much more a collective (in the tribalist sense) enterprise; for all their talk of individualism, they have much more of a hive mentality (especially as it relates to choosing society's "drones") than the average leftist. Our diversity of thought makes us much stronger in the long run...but it's sure hard to get organized in the meantime! I guess the ultimate question is, is human evil (define it as you like) a problem that can be solved? If so, how? And if not...what then? --------

Intelligent? I don't think I can manage that! Ask somebody smart...someone who more often falls prey to the temptation to exist. But I do love his line, from a journal, I think -- what is it? -- something like, "I'm only 20, and already I am a master of Death." Nice ring to that...well out in front of the herd, eh? And so PRECOCIOUS! And the heights of despair...consider the irony of that! Or consider the profundity (and there's more irony for you). I don't really care about Cioran. A friend recommended a book of his once, I didn't like it, and we let the matter drop. About ten years later, I watched him pull the books from his shelf and say, "I don't need THESE anymore." That's life!
The one line from a philosopher that consistently appeals to me is by Kierkegaard: "Systematizers build a castle, and live beside it in a shack." -- A good gag, eh? I think you should place your cigar respectfully on the poor man's grave.

Freitas Jr. - 28 February 2001: Thanks to work done by Patrick Macé, "Ecophagy" has been translated into French and can be downloaded in rich text format (288 Kb). -------- Abstract The maximum rate of global ecophagy by biovorous self-replicating nanorobots is fundamentally restricted by the replicative strategy employed; by the maximum dispersal velocity of mobile replicators; by operational energy and chemical element requirements; by the homeostatic resistance of biological ecologies to ecophagy; by ecophagic thermal pollution limits (ETPL); and most importantly by our determination and readiness to stop them. Assuming current and foreseeable energy-dissipative designs requiring ~100 MJ/kg for chemical transformations (most likely for biovorous systems), ecophagy that proceeds slowly enough to add ~4°C to global warming (near the current threshold for immediate climatological detection) will require ~20 months to run to completion; faster ecophagic devices run hotter, allowing quicker detection by policing authorities. All ecophagic scenarios examined appear to permit early detection by vigilant monitoring, thus enabling rapid deployment of effective defensive instrumentalities.

I go: polegrimepiet America is the best so far; everybody is exceedingly fine (tuned, dressed, you name it and very busy congratulating each other) and freedom reigns in fact .. . but . . in 'feeory' things look less rosy galory. The bliss of the shortsighted ends where one steps back and puts human ingenuity in the properly proportional perspective of more than the immediately visible crests of generations. Come take the broad brush think and dive with me .. .read sweepitpiet and . . Diffusionist cargo cults have denuded entire nations, neighbouring ones and further afield hinterlands and colonies alike in rapid successions which themselves fall all over each other. Displacement is championed by those who willy nilly (rilly more willy but they'll always deny it) acquired a taste for border bursting incontinence, profiting by it and if at all, they 'harmonize' and 'concert' only to 'legimitatize' violation of their victims. Americans have been abused and beguiled to combine and apply ingenuity in the sense I intended to sketch here. Rich pickings on a continent that was not only sustainably but enrichingly tended stewarded and nurtured by cultures that held womens simultaneously modest and durable visions and decisions in love and war sacred. Deracinated (uprooted), irrational (fantasy working less and less as guide to help choose from possible futures and more as an escape from more and more sordid present but reaching no further than an extrapolated exxageration and ultimate consequence; the old innoculation belief, the ritual token/receipt/taxvoucher slutslotcoin proving you have strayed into the masses) and beset by the more and more utterly alien, Americans (and their lovers/vassals, seducees) nevertheless beat their breast and feed their demographilthy appetites on a Gargantuan scale. ------ I watched parts of fight club last night (incredulously) and since it had its moments (none of which shone through in the reviews of it that I read at the time of its appearance) I decided to dig around a bit http://nuance.dhs.org/lbo-talk/9910/author.html http://eserver.org/bs/32/henwood.html (on credit card creed) -----------

In the movie Fight Club, the real name of the protagonist (Ed Norton's character) is never revealed. And while some feel the only reason behind this is to give the character more of an "everyman" quality, I say, do not be deceived. Because it's obvious to anyone with working eyes that "Jack" is actually someone whom many of us grew up with, someone who might've been present at all your childhood breakfasts of Sugar Frosted Chocolate Bombs. You see, "Jack" from Fight Club and Calvin from the greatest comic strip ever, "Calvin and Hobbes," are in fact the exact same person! You have doubts, I'm sure. Well, that's to be expected. on Joyce:

What we have been doing is looking at the chain of reasonings that lead me to read Baudelaire's verse on Rembrandt as an allusion of "Raimbrandt, and at particular pieces of evidence that show that Joyce was aware of the verse; aware of the "rayon d'hiver" and of "beacons" and their connections to 'rainbow'. How Rimbaud and "Raimbrandt" are connected by rainbows and by a construction, "rinbus round Demetrius", parallel to "Raimbrandt round Mac Garvey". And how Baudelaire's verse relates to Rimbaud and Rembrandt and introduces a Rembrandt image of a crucifix with a rainbow halo, and a KKK association reinforced by the burning, "brandt", of that crucifix. If we accept the poem's presence here, then we have a room with a large representation of Jesus on the Cross with the tears of the sufferers below becoming a miasmic mist rising up and cut by a ray of winter light (That the "Steam" has a miasmic quality - as the poem would require - is supported by the earlier game at 176.02-.03 that McHugh reads as 'Piss in your breeches and play with the steam').

In the Rembrandt picture often used to illustrate this poem in French publications the mist cut by the ray of winter light in fact forms a _halo_ over the head of the crucifix, and provides one interpretation of "His Steam was like your Raimbrandt round Mac Garvey", = a halo formed from the sufferings of his followers around the head of Garvey as a Christ figure. The light in the "Steam" makes a rainbow, but either as winter light or 'burnt', its colors turn to black and white. If we wish to go further and read "Steam" as 'anger', then we can read: 'His anger was like a cross burnt around Marcus Garvey.' Karl Reisman Bryllars@concentric.net

> 7:14pm Wed May 28 '03 Why have Americans started to vilify the Guardian? Why does the actor John Malkovich want to kill the Independent foreign correspondent Robert Fisk? And why is the Princeton economics professor Paul Krugman writing with a new-found attention to detail? Answer: Fisk, Krugman and the Guardian are all victims of the latest web-publishing phenomenon: blogging. ---------- These blogs do not have large direct readerships: InstaPundit clocks only 40,000 readers a day. But many readers run their own blogs; others are political or media professionals. So a growing community is aware of whatever most irritated Sullivan today. This in turn creates what the legal theorist Cass Sunstein calls "cybercascades", reaching millions of readers with ideas, in this case associated almost exclusively with the right. They are democratic dynamite: private networks of information, unchecked by sensible debate. The aftermath of 11 September increased the cascades. Blogging became warblogging; the community became indignant cheerleaders for any madcap Bush anti-terrorism scheme. Attempts to question were given a vigorous fisking.

A great majority of live callers to a radio broadcast in holland asking to respond to the assertion that the anti-globalizers would be vulgar rioters offered self policing as the solution and it is. You can't point to other's mistakes in lieu of you own just cause the opponent's are bigger. It's gonna take little refusals coupled to fresh starts, many more multiply diffusive; a matter of the right sort of information; god knows I tried to present it and failed.

Nettimer (ster?) Francis Whang does a very decent(ly debunksome) account of an Orlowski article in The Register ----- next in thread is a defense of O by t: msg00013.html by t byfield who links to jargonscout.com - other refs (posted next in thread by francis) not to be missed:

> "Google to fix blog noise problem" (http://theregister.co.uk/content/6/30621.html) Except for the fact that Orlowski offers almost no attribution to this conjecture except for saying that "sources suggest this is the most likely option." Are these even _inside_ sources? Or is this just some dude in an Internet cafe playing armchair CTO? - and this: Maybe my psychologizing of Orlowski is just a nasty way of saying I don't like his writing. To take a recent example, I found the comparison of Googlewashing (theregister.co.uk/content/6/30087.html) to Orwellian newspeak to betray an astounding lack of perspective. (Not unlike recent posts here about the quality of nettime, which try to turn personal preference over list management into tubthumping ideological statements.) Newspeak was backed by the power of the state and was granted monopoly over all other interpretations of language, but if you don't like Google, you can just stop using it. ---- Francis some more: The preoccupation with technologically > aggregating personality and reputation (trackback, blogrolls, etc.) is probably counterproductive: These aren't technological problems, hey're social, and hence resist automation. And I think many of the evangelists tend to vastly underestimate the political hurdles they face if they want to have a lasting impact on the outside world. (I thought James Moore's "Second Superpower" piece, which led Orlowski to coin the term "Googlewash", was embarrassingly naive at points.)

I suspect they are deliberately trying to confuse us about things which are really quite simple and can't help suspecting if perhaps the intended function of the profession is not simply that of smoke-screen and camouflage? Bill Bartlett Bracknell Tas ---------- Exactly. But speaking incomprehensible jargon prevents the riff raff from criticizing the brahmins. Take away that, and the "utlity function" becomes a "drop in a bucket" , "opportunity cost" becomes a "bird in hand is better than two on a bush" and similar all too familiar common sense cliches. This is a sure way for a Joe Schmoe saying "I do not need an overpaid brahmin to tell me that." Wojtek ------- Actually "opportunity cost" is one of the few concepts I'm grateful to formal economics study for. It's not the same as bird in hand. I can't think of any colloquial equivalent for it. listpop ----------- It depends how you count those birds. If you have to give up one that you already have for the two that you might catch on the bush (which is how I read the saying) - you will get a gist of "opportunity cost" - no? But again, my problem is not with economic modeling but with economic modeling turned into ruling class ideology. It is the same as "marxism-lenininsm" in fSU, or geo-centrism in the middle ages. Wojtek ------------ I hate to start sounding like a technical economist, but indeed, "a bird in hand is worth two in the bush," is not opportunity cost at all, but what is now coming to be called the "endowment effect," which itself is a discovery of the behavioral economists that goes against the grain of standard neoclassical economists. If you have something you really do not want to give it up, but if you don't have it, then it is not such a big deal. This was discovered in contingent valuation studies of the environment. People will demand to be paid much more for a 10% decline in enviro quality than they are willing to pay for a 10% increase in enviro quality. An average of the by now voluminous studies would suggest that the ratio is likely to be about 3 to 1, although some have it as high as 10 to 1, easily. This violates standard economic theory, although not most peoples' common sense. Barkley Rosser ---

> Slavoj Zizek Multiculturalism, or, the Cultural Logic of Multinational Capitalism It is as if we are witnessing today the ultimate confirmation of Freud's thesis, from Civilization and its Discontents, on how, after every assertion of Eros, Thanatos reasserts itself with a vengeance. At the very moment when, according to the predominant liberal ideology, we are finally leaving behind the "immature" political passions (the regime of the "political": class struggle and other "out-dated" divisive antagonisms) for the post-ideological "mature" pragmatic universe of rational administration and negotiated consensus, for the universe, free of utopian impulses, in which the dispassionate administration of social affairs goes hand in hand with the aestheticized hedonism (the pluralism of "ways of life"), - at this very moment, the foreclosed political is celebrating a triumphant comeback in its most archaic form of pure, undistilled racist hatred of the Other which renders the rational tolerant attitude utterly impotent. In this precise sense, the contemporary "postmodern" racism is the symptom of the multiculturalist late capitalism, bringing to the light the inherent contradiction of the liberal-democratic ideological project. Liberal "tolerance" condones the folklorist Other deprived of its substance (like the multitude of "ethnic cuisines" in a contemporary megalopolis) - any "real" Other is instantly denounced for its "fundamentalism", since the kernel of Otherness resides in the regulation of its jouissance, i.e. the "real Other" is by definition "patriarchal", "violent", never the Other of ethereal wisdom and charming customs. One is tempted to reactualize here the old Marcusean notion of "repressive tolerance", reconceiving it as the tolerance of the Other in its aseptized, benign form, which forecloses the dimension of the Real of the Other's jouissance.

Peter Boelke was economics editor of the weekly Der Spiegel from 1974 to 2001. His essay that could help us see the ambivalence of globalization is translated from the German. ------

I post: on parity 28.Aug.2003 07:28 ---- wilken, walters (via piet) Think “BIG”…… Focus “SMALL” (piet: nothing 'clear' about that????) Some thought provoking basic principles of Raw Materials Economics (Quoted from writings of Carl Wilken the leader of the team of economic analysts that identified these principles, and from Charles Walters Jr. from his thought provoking book, “Raw Materials Economics”) • Raw material income is the first part of our economic equation and the foundation that governs the balance of our economy. Fully 70% of all economic activity is geared to answering the wants of the population – food, clothing and household goods. •Farm production at parity (that is, at equal exchange value between farming and the various income-producing sectors of the economy for finished goods) governs earned national income and therefore its maintenance supports national income on an earned basis. •Parity prices for raw materials automatically gives us a price level which permits the nation to operate as a solvent business with a normal profit as determined by the competitive market on finished goods. futureheritage.net/facts.pdf ------

For yet better effects use (in combination with - though one follows from the other): chelseagreen.com/Money/EssentialReading.htm ----- and this: ambivalence????? -- the ambivalence lies in the fact that the mechanisms allowing greater freedoms to be an individual yet also more international and the ones for socalled playing field levelling are a mere guise and dagger hiding cloak and deceptive tag in service of the same old opportune, mercantile tricks in service of group strenghtening exterritorial ultra crossborder and across the board group formations and nationalisms, not suprisingly forming fronts along the ethnic and cultural branding faultlines. Just like location deceives away from the precedent if not primacy of allocation so does the schizo disposition hype a belief in some miracle for all which works out to be an excercise of greedily private benefit.

341536 Political Conservatism as Motivated Social Cognition - A Summary B Herbert 12:33pm Thu Aug 28 '03 In May of this year a group of psychology researchers released a paper which caused a stir, titled "Political Conservatism as Motivated Social Cognition", which sought to synthesize years of research into conservatism and the right wing phenomena. The paper is lengthy, and some of the terminology is difficult, and so I thought it might be good to post a summary of some of the interesting points it raised.

You start to talk you stop to walk. So, was he killed preemptively by himself or was he, confronted with the public eyes, grossed out by scarily live and eagerly interested people feeling exposed, oppressed and pushed around instead of 'seeing' them the way he preffered to, that is, routinely and comfortably distancing them, juggling hypothetical masses of 'm into great big lumpsums, applying his analytical prowess to speculate and systematically calculate the props that would get'm harmlessly dead. Working for the greatest mass murdering sacro-sanctimonious priesthood alive today who share this ailment meant he wasn't allowed to stop, defuse and deny the 'counter' action justifying projection of it, wasn't permitted to give benefit of doubt, much less transfer and (let) slip ownership of noblesse and innocence into the enemy camp cause he felt like edging himself toward the sanely non-violent one (too much too soon or too little too late). Die Zeit, a fat german leftish multicult newspaper defends him and oddly enough claims he was defending the government, in effect claiming there was no reason to mention him at all in connection to the most well known accusations of the past weeks. So, is Kelley the fall guy for the BBC as much as for the govt??? This is as far as I'm willing to feed this hell of confusion my attention, period. I do know one thing. since this item is making one stretch after another I decide to post this: I'll give you tortsure (referring to someone's jocularity) piet 12:35pm Wed Sep 10 '03 comment#345060 Folks like Judith Butler (344833) are anxious for alert people not to say jews for short when they mean Israeli govt policy. Fine. Perfectly good maroccans in Holland get defensive over similar generalizations all the time too. That's a problem cause/and/but pointing at it is taking time away from putting the much needed, the much more urgent solution forward. --------------The way democracies constitute their gvts these days (since govt monies [[created specifically for social spending and tax payment]] are out the window) the scum rises to the top easier and faster all the time, add to that a disastrous intimate autonomy poisoning scale upping and the frothpeaks are no longer relatively overlookable and though still overcomeable here and there (did I spell that right or coin something again?) it is no wonder that at some point blame is ascribed collectively (by victims competitors and perpetrators alike) yet the trouble arises (another expression emptied of true meaning) precisely cause the concept collective has lost all coherent and wholistic embodyment. Bastards are unreformable and one looks to their victims demandingly at first but turning to despair once one realizes they are all equally unable to do an autobootstraptransform. Or are they/we? --------------- Collective responsibility is like loose sand which still hits pretty hard even when acting centrifugally and/or dispersedly, for instance to stop Bush from entering Iraq (hint hint). So, must we allow for the paradox of compound accumulation and mass momentum accelaration due to succesful cooperation to be Schumpeterian value free and coopted by the worst of us, our essentially lonesome leaders and bleeders? For these processes to keep happening and be driven (with the unwitting aid of the innocent and those who like to indulge it and/or pretend to remain that way and thus, ineluctably, move) in the wrong direction to be forever unstoppable? Humilitation noninstitutable and not governable from below? Hell no. Invisible foot anybody??? Solutions must always start somewhere small and simple. Throttle the chokehold monopolies of parasitic monies one shop/farm and/or product/service at a time. Give the word collective some meaning again, even if it's in a tiny way for starters. --------------- 345678 (it's a floyal rush, i mean a floray, .. .rrr ... a frolay .. .a floyar lush .. .aahm, . .a loyal frush ..) free trade in defect*(tie over)*s vs fresh and wholesomepiet 6:34am Fri Sep 12 '03 ---- some cancun related solutions proffered --- Between free trade and protectionism ought to no longer be found: casualties and loafer laughing all the way to bank. ------The reasons for benefit accruing from overcoming large distances with products that are not grown any less around the targeted markets are not well enough understood. The principle one of those is that they get grown on soil with more balance in terms of trace mineral spectrum, content, interaction and activity, hence profitability stems from discerning their reputation (enhancing effect).

I started to become aware of this thanks to Julius Hensel (died 1903) who showed there was an eager market welcoming oats imported from Hungary.
The need for local balance follows from recognition we need no longer base our wheelings and dealings on scarcity when it comes to balanced soils (no thanks to the bio-industry, the rudiments of which were already well into lying mode giving my pal Julius a hard time).
Local balance: 1: obviates the need for costly transport; 2: allows the premium benefit known as freshness (which, combined with the insight we need to reenact, honour and maintain the whole evolutionary chain unbroken [[starting with breaking rock, if only in order to keep a sense of humus and humilitancy]] can once again help us partake of its concommitant vitality).

Meanwhile, what do we do about trade rules????? How bout this: Protectionism is OK and justified only if/when/as long as the product stays on the home market ---- imports are fine as long as the price paid the producer (minus a maximum percentage for the handlers since the risk must not be left in their hands) is the costprice of similar products grown at home.

RB: Every time something like this happens I think: can it get any worse? From gangbangs to threatening cops (burning IDed effigies), with the kicking to death of a frail female junkie in clear daylight by a group of at least 7, new depths of depravity reach n breach a generally more and more depressed Holland almost daily. The political comet Pim Fortuyn, murdered by an animal activist on his way to becoming prime minister started the thus stifled trend to know, measure and face these dangers. Folk like him were demonized as fascists for decennia before that. Useless projects to reeducate the former guestworker's offspring going astray have nevertheless cost millions. Anything sterner than the talking cures that counsel and pamper were condemned. 3/4s of the petty crime is commited by them and that's 2.5 times as many as their more native colleagues. proposal:

1) age from which on one becomes accountable in criminal law: 16

2) stopping the eagerly used opportunities that allow a dutch maroccan to import brides (in the hopes they will be more traditional, read: docile)

3) spreading the urban delinquents across the country out to facilitate integration (translators note: if you're gonna relocate them why not make repatriation more attractive??? I foresee only more friction and gang mobility result from this much touted measure).

4) obligatory membership of sports clubs language skill school

356988 - Ahold's Dutch sales fall as customers boycott supermarkets piet 12:21pm Fri Oct 24 '03 see how easy it is to help those megalomaniacally bloated barons pipe down: CUSTOMER POWER!!!!!! -----

> 16.09.2003 Associated Press AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) - Ahold, the troubled global food retailer, said Tuesday sales at its flagship Dutch supermarket chain Albert Heijn declined last week, as consumers boycotted its stores to protest a multimillion euro (dollar) pay package for the company's new chief executive. A spokesman for the chain, Hans Koeleman, claimed the decline in sales by several percentage points at its 700 stores was seasonal, and was not heavily influenced by the consumer action. Koeleman declined to quantify the drop, though he denied reports of a 5 percent fall. He acknowledged Albert Heijn had lost some customers over a dispute about the salary of Ahold's new Swedish CEO, Anders Moberg.

> In additional news, Ahold supervisory board chairman Henny de Ruiter announced that he will resign from his position at the shareholders' meeting next month. In other Ahold news, there was a report late last week that Albert Heijn, Ahold's flagship chain in the Netherlands, had seen a drop in customers since the shareholder meeting last Thursday at which the company's new CEO's pay package of $10 million over two years was announced. One local newspaper put the drop at 15 percent, though the company said it didn't "recognize" those figures. Well, the company now says that Albert Heijn did see a sales drop last week, but while it would not put an exact figure on the decrease, the company implied it was less than five percent. A spokesman also suggested that CEO Moberg's compensation package was less the cause than the usual September slowdown. More detail half way through this file:

Underneath their black ski masks they wear pony tails. They are multi-cultural, feminist and gay. They are well paid and have immunity from prosecution. They had their way with the students at Columbine for four hours while police stooges kept rescuers out. They eventually get whacked by bigger fish. But what do they care? This is their destiny. There's no other way out for this kind, short of sincere repentance and public confession, which rarely happens because it requires supernatural protection. Doug Henwood quotes (and praises) Workers Vanguard (but not on this subject)- October 24, 2003 > [...] > As for the Green Party's call for "the creation and spread of local > currencies and barter" and "consumer items that would contribute > toward economic autonomy for individuals," these eccentric reactionary > positions are pitched to layers of the petty bourgeoisie concerned > with ecology and small-scale production. Nostalgic > claptrap for petit bourgeois romantics. Doug ---------- How so? It certainly wouldn't work as a substitute for widely-used currencies, that's obvious. But as for developing a smaller, more contained economy to keep trade in the neighborhood, it doesn't strike me as a bad or nostalgic idea. (Hard to see "nostalgia" in the scheme, since I can't recall any time when local currencies actually existed.) What's the argument against it? ----------- What would it accomplish? Local currencies could only be used on a very small scale, for the provision of mundane services. Sorry to quote myself, but it would be: haircuts yes, scissors maybe, steel never. It couldn't at all affect the arrangement of complex manufacturing or services. And why is keeping trade in the neighborhood so desirable, anyway? That sounds cramped, xenophobic, and suffocating. Doug ----------

Brian Siano is a proponent;

> I agree, it wouldn't work for something like steel, or other large-scale transactions that tend to require trade outside the neighborhood. And I don't think it would affect the arrangement of complex manufacturing, either-- but then, I don't think that's the goal of such a system. But keeping trade in the neighborhood is definitely desirable, especially if one's neighborhood is facing the influx of a lot of business where the profits and other benefits tend to go outside of the immediate area-- say, Wal-Mart. One might wish to provide support for local businesses to insulate them from competition with such powerful economies of scale. Also, it helps avoid the problems with economic monocultures; if the local trade goes through the local Big Box store, and that chain decides to stop carrying a locally-desired item-- or, less likely, goes out of business-- there would be local alternatives to which residents could turn. Creation of a local scrip system could encourage residents to direct some of their spending to local establishments which honor it. Obviously, one couldn't create an economy that's hermetically sealed from the rest of the globe; it seems to me that there'd _have_ to be a responsible exchange rate with the prevailing economy. Obviously this wouldn't be a cure-all, or some kind of revolutionary new principle of economics. But the questions for me are whether it's workable or not, and if it's had a beneficial effect for local economies in the places where it's been tried.

I don't think M Dawson has read any Knapp/Beckerath yet:

> "Personally, I think the "local currency" idea is mainly a hippie form of tax evasion" This may explain why these people are going to _remain_ "workers," rather than, say, "active participants in decision-making." For one thing, how the hell are barter and local-currency economies antithetical to 21st-century industry? Only way I can see _that_ is if someone was proposing eliminating all the other modern banking systems, and replacing those with local currencies and barter. Since I haven't seen anything like that outside of a handful of cranks, I'd say the Workers' Vanguard's way off base here-- not surprisingly. ------ joanna bujes wrote: >"And why is keeping trade in the neighborhood so desirable, anyway? >That sounds cramped, xenophobic, and suffocating." > >1. reduces driving, reduces energy consumption >2. makes seller more accountable to buyer >3. locally grown stuff, according to some, is healthier >4. customizes market to buyer ------ Before there were national markets, buyers often faced local monopolies. In a small market, there can't be much specialization, either. So local production can reduce choice and contribute to higher prices. This is even true on a national scale. Before Japanese cars hit the U.S. market, the Big Three were producing crappy cars. Yes, locally grown food can be better, and when it is I'm all for it. But that would mean no lettuce in January for most of the U.S. Doug ----- I should have also said that these are specific instances where the local may be preferable to the non-local (though I'm skeptical about accountability - I'm thinking of the archetypal petit bourgeois who runs the high-priced hardware store down the block as an example from daily life). But I don't see how there's any virtue to the local in itself. Doug ---------- Shane Taylor wrote: >Seems to me that the local scale means the high costs of production for >many modern goodies are spread over a smaller market. So rather than >spreading the costs of a handful of plants over a massive market, you >duplicate many of those costs unnecessarily (even at smaller capacities) >and spread them over markets so small they may not even be able to >sustain the process. -------- Yup. Of course, if the aim is to deindustrialize and deurbanize, then localism makes sense. But many advocates of localism are coy about that. They also talk about reducing the human population, and don't say how they propose to get there. Doug

Sincerely, a dedicated reader, Ken.----- Reality is that which refuses to go away when I stop believing in it. -- Phillip K. Dick --------A private view of testimony By WARREN CLEMENTS Globe and Mail Oct. 22 2003 Words have the darnedest ancestors. Consider our court system, in which people testify and give testimony. Who, apart from those already in the know, would link those words to the testicles? All three words derive from the Latin word testis, meaning witness, which is also the source of protest and attest. The testicles got their name from the diminutive form, testiculi, meaning little witnesses, because they bore witness to a man's virility (vir being Latin for man). In fact, a letter to Ms. magazine once protested against the use of the word testimony when referring to a woman's statements, "because the root is testes, which has nothing to do with being a female." The letter-writer suggested substituting "ovarimony."

> There are alternatives to the global economy. David Boyle explores the world's local currencies. It was a small courtroom near the Pyrennees that, in the last few days of 1997, put France's successful new local currency on the map. David Boyle is the author of Funny Money: In Search of Alternative Cash (HarperCollins/Flamingo, £6.99). His new book, The Tyranny of Numbers was published in January. --------------

> Alistair McConnachie 3:04am Thu Dec 4 '03 comment#368649 fresher! (januari): The Money Changers currency reform from aristotle to e-cash edited by David Boyle Reviewed by Alistair McConnachie Prosperity, January 2003 David Boyle is the editor of radical economics, the bi-monthly newspaper of top think and do-tank, The New Economics Foundation. He is also the author of Funny Money (1999) which examines complimentary currencies, and The Tyranny of Numbers (2001). His latest work, The Money Changers: Currency reform from Aristotle to e-cash is a supremely encouraging book. ..... There's a lot of wisdom, and a lot of powerful stuff in these 274 pages. For example, Democratic nominee for the US Presidency, William Jennings Bryan's words of 1896 echo down through the years: "If they dare to come out in the open field and defend the gold standard as a good thing, we will fight them to the uttermost. Having behind us the producing masses of this nation and the world, supported by the commercial interests, the labouring interests, and the toilers everywhere, we will answer their demand for a gold standard by saying to them: You shall not press down upon the brow of labour this crown of thorns, you shall not crucify mankind upon a cross of gold." In the January 2001 issue of Prosperity we examined how The Wizard of Oz story was related to Bryan's attempt to achieve the Presidency. Boyle includes an extract from L. Frank Baum's novel here. I was particularly pleased to see an extract from the Henry Ford article from the New York Times, 4 December 1921, which gave the source as The Social Crediter, May-June 1998. ..... For example, in the January/ February 2003 issue of radical economics, David Boyle writes: "How can we sustain the financial system when speculation is now more than 20 times as powerful as trade, and has more than 20 times as much financial clout -- and when the people who run the system in Tokyo, London and New York have more to gain from instability than they do from stability? > Jean-Joseph Goux's presentation was essentially an assault on Lacan's Symbolic order. For Goux, the Symbolic order is itself an assault on the Imaginary and it fails on the question of the feminine. His was the contrapuntal presentation, the effort to de-Lacanize Lacan using Lacan, and in this sense not far from the deconstructive project of Derrida. For Goux, psychoanalysis is a "technology of iconoclasm." In the end, his is a very familiar charge, namely, that psychoanalysis is phallocentric since its theory resides on a formalization of the phallocracy of contemporary social exchange.

http://mailman.lbo-talk.org/pipermail/lbo-talk/ Week-of-Mon-20040301/004657.html housefillupcipher Slavoj on ReliMel: "A corpse is the ideal sexual partner of a tolerant subject trying to avoid any passionate interaction." -- a shocker innit? but this line is pretty carefully context embedded. Once we have decended slowly along preceding and preliminary lines falling the rest of the way is perfectly survivable. Ps: I think I'll hold off on Kierkegaard (wasn't he an Asperger patient as last weeks dutch weekly article with an eye on(remove these parentheses)to(or these)wards explained?). -- of course it can only get better after this; here's Slavoj again:

> "On today's market, we find a series of products deprived of their malignant property: coffee without caffeine, cream without fat, beer without alcohol. The list goes on: virtual sex as sex without sex, the Colin Powell doctrine of war with no casualties (on our side, of course) as war without war, the redefinition of politics as expert administration as politics without politics. Today's tolerant liberal multiculturalism wishes to experience the Other deprived of its Otherness (the idealized Other who dances fascinating dances and has an ecologically holistic approach to reality, while features like wife beating remain out of sight). Along the same lines, what this tolerance gives us is a decaffeinated belief, a belief that does not hurt anyone and never requires us to commit ourselves." --- And the concluding line: "Today, when religions themselves (from New Age spirituality to the cheap spiritualist hedonism of the Dalai Lama) are more than ready to serve postmodern pleasure-seeking, it is consequently, and paradoxically, only a thorough materialism that is able to sustain a truly ascetic, militant and ethical stance."

-- praise from a consistently levelheaded LBOer:

> How true. And a thorough materialism would point out that abstract "cultural politics" is not the answer. Solve people's practical problems and give them access to education, and fundamentalism will wither away. Tell them "I'm a materialist and I'm attacking your religion," and fundamentalism will grow. P.S. Lacan's theory of love is his typical cynical bullshit. A small joke is not social science. Likewise, it scares me whenever leftists start ripping on "liberal" tolerance. Do we really want a world that isn't tolerant? I think not. --------

> Writing 50 years ago in War, Sadism and Pacifism, the English psychoanalyst Edward Glover commented: "The most cursory study of the dream-life and fantasies of the insane shows that ideas of world destruction are latent in the unconscious mind." But it's clear that in today's America these fantasies are no longer latent. The British are still reticent about their deepest fears - class war, a reversion to economic feudalism, the spectre of an all-dominant and all-vapid consumer society. But in modern America, there are no suppressed dreams, no forbidden nightmares.

> FRESH RESEARCH REPORT OF A TRACE METAL-CWD STUDY AT SASKATOON UNI IS BEING EXPLOITED TO DISCREDIT A MISREPRESENTED VERSION OF PURDEY'S THEORY. 3. On the basis of the findings in this study, it seems that the contribution of environmental copper deficiency to CWD pathogenesis could still be plausible. For the authors concede that the two main farms involved in the sampling (eg; those farms on which they held the most information) did indeed produce a significant correlation between copper deficiency and CWD incidence. Despite this statement, the authors proceed to 'water down' the more reliable data of their project by introducing the results from farms which they declare they had little information about. They then use the overall results - drawn from both reliable and unreliable sample locations - to discredit the whole trace mineral hypothesis. PERSONAL REPERCUSSIONS. As an overworked, unsupported single handed international TSE researcher and lecturer, it is very tedious to be constantly forced to spend valuable time and energy countering these kind of publications - that employ irrelevant scientific arguments as a means of discrediting the validity my work. This happens much too frequently for comfort, where scientific teams who are understandably eager to maintain a steady inflow of grant money, feel forced to compromise their good science by moulding their results to satisfy the agenda of their paymasters - the local government departments, etc.

'predator' feature at indymain on june 8 indymedia.org/en/2004/06/111221.shtml

> A big part of Predator's legacy is his extensive website, sharing his knowledge and experience in detail on subjects ranging from "thoughts on the information-systemic nature of reality" to how not to get laid - "Getting Laid" a complete guide to wireless networks. He even wrote 35,000 words of his PhD "Paradigm" which will be made public via a link to his home page. From the time he was diagnosed with cancer until three days before his death, he wrote a weblog of over 230 pages on his experience. His blog portrays a poignant story which documents thoroughly the ups and downs, the triumphs and turmoil of everyday life in this, our battle for a better world. ----

On Wednesday, 2 June, three days before he died, he wrote the following:

> Why are there diseases with cures and without? Why are there situations into which we get ourselves and never extract ourselves completely? I am fearful as I look down the grass hills around Neutral Bay in my mind's eye because I cannot go to these places anymore.
> this is the final, scariest part of stuff I will write with or about anything and I find myself resigned, wordless and empty in its face of coming fury. These are the protective measures of a rabbit who you might find staring down your headlights one night. Even a well-informed rabbit. I feel so scared of this stupid pointless, empty death and yet I feel in some ways its just doing its job. It has not singled me out, it's just doing its orders. I am grateful for the chance to think of perhaps that there were cures that may have once awaited me in different food shops, eating choices, or whatever else might have availed me but of which I did not avail myself. I just did not get lucky and take any of these cures at the moment I was of incorrect supervision.

Celia Farber (!!) breaks out a whole new tone (that is the straightest prose joyceanicism could ever wish for) to start out into the last quarter of this item, here's a few excerpts:

> "AIDS Inc. has proven vastly profitable not just in terms of money, but perhaps more importantly, that invaluable commodity: Glory. The opportunity to be in a position of perpetual Rightness, commenting publicly on others people's perpetual Wrongness. If it sounds like religion, that's precisely, in my opinion, what it is. (....) But all of that aside, the only thing that matters is how or whether people are staying alive in the age of AIDS. If I hadn't been poking around in it for seven years, if I hadn't heard countless versions of the same story, namely that people who believe in HIV as a death sentence wind up dead and people who don't don't, if I didn't know so many people who have been HIV positive and healthy for up to fourteen years without "doing" anything, and others who took AZT and died in a few months, if I didn't see the terror, pain and confusion caused by the false and shameless marketing of AZT, and so on and so on, then maybe I would be nicer, better, more objective, more responsible.

> Piet, I wrote (assembled actually because a lot of that is actually the writing of other people) Anyway, Barnacle Bob just did a clip and paste of that piece which I had put together on some other discussion group. The only full sentence Bob wrote was at the bottom, where he injected the part about lots of links and returning to the bimetallic standard. In other spots, he put in words like "we" (gold bugs) where I had said gold bugs as though I was not included with that group. I will enclose a file that is marked up and color coded. Also, I added a bit to the file where my additions are highlighted in blue. Levi hi Levi, you may have noted I love colourcode and will pay attention to your effort in the near future, meanwhile rest assured I like to be considered excluded from the true gold bug collective, in any conventional sense of the words anyway, (as I think you mean to be). ---- The link off my site which Bob include makes abundantly clear that photosynthesis rates once tabulated, published, raised to and praised as a most equitable and steady plus lifelike and therefore desirable value standard will do better than the one based on gold ever, retaining it's inflation preventing slow increment quality, but losing the heavyness, the lumpiness, the all too dangerous concentratedness not to mentioning the highly toxic industry (that calls for it and that it calls) for and of (mining)* it. ----- ('winning' = an obviously biased word the dutch use as the translation for mining but they don't say 'underwinning' when they mean undermining)* -----

On the other hand I know *(you too know?)*credit cannot ever become completely gratuitous, especially not for selfindulgent 'goods' and 'services' (murking the waters with the verbal battles over the wether or not bad and bizarre habits biology thinks it can afford itself). Be that as it may, let's not lose faith that the price of credit can be as just as it needs to be and we make it fall in a range well short of usurious (that is to say, or I take that to mean: mutual commitment and properly consensed [[amongst betwixt and by ALL involved AND affected]] plus accurately and as realistically as possible anticipated targets).

The following are internet radio statios that I listen to frequently: WDVX (wdvx.com)- americana and bluegrass from Knoxville Tenn. --- WUMB (wumb.org) - blues, jazz and folk out of Boston --- WMVY (wmvy.com) - contemporary acoustic from Martha's Vineyard, Mass. --- WKSU (wksu.org/folk) - like wumb - from Kent State Univ, Ohio

I do a good bit of link sticking in plain html on my blog and most recent archived issues have one or two .. . . .. matter of fact I was suprised to find myself high up the google ranks when searching for/with: 'bleugrass radio internet' since I shop around from time to time and can say in a very heartfelt way that folkalley beats the competition, none of which come close to suiting my tastes as well.

nice looking forum but the name is less of a happy choice, I prefer to strike at the rock and make way for roots, my sensibilities dictate that roots are ok strikers are out.

In my teens I used to have a sticker on my door saying 'books are weapons' and it dawns on me that I am actually playing with fire and making a spectacle of myself*(professing to condemn the use of weapons and all, I wield an easily looted and pillaged one to boot . . . . .but I don't mind anybody 'defending'/borrowing my colours since I love to keep my Karmaccounterwait weighted as lobsidedly as I can wing [[myself off the other end of]] it)*,most folks should not be handed any pens anymore than arms and I realize my use is as close to unwielding it as that of many others, no unmixed blessing. Due to Laurence Rickels' obvious completeness aim if not claim in all matters vampiric he is obliged to at least describe this yarn/theory (sampled just above this line) that packs a shock of plausible facticity none of the others really have if you ask me. -------- I look forward to what he will say when he hears of and/or sees marks I now make in a more brands and births bedecked world than ever, Meanwhile, you make sure to go read the rest of this riveting 'eugeniality' bloodline zealotry, exclusive elitism. It is truly astounding and grows on you. It actually has echos of Oscar Kiss Maerth's work and perhaps a few sources and inspirations in common I would wager. This surely be satire on what an sf.indy item about its 'mission statement' says, but without really realizing this I go: you are in fact the editor who between wheeling off barrows and warding off arrows worth of spam found time to post this above passage at nyc indy? I told you so years ago now (google poetpiet indymedia and accountable). Instead diversity of tactics was championed, adopted and practiced. This prevented effective self policing which would have been good practice for the more autonomous world just around the corner we claim to be in a hurry and long for. It accomodated, shielded, hid, even (and/or therefore) sanctioned wrongdoing (ways and means dichotomies, enemy infections, whatever you wanna call 'm) within our own ranks resulting in pre- but patriot act priming provo*(cations)* to arise from amongst us which as I cannot wager but nevertheless suspect prevented a timely, simple, peaceful yet suprise take over of the white house before the war, and that's just to mention a minor side benefit. I suggest we learn a few tec tricks from a site with great indy affinity potential: ledgerism.net ----- my comment was deleted and this one is next (to be):

"a31" was hyped up and i don't think it turned out nearly as effective as anyone had expected. if people are willing to be critical, i'm afraid they're going to blame other protesters and not the idea itself. this is the third time (?) a strategy like a31 has been deployed for protests and each time it has failed to live up anywhere near expectations. it never completely fails, some small actions occur, usually pretty meaningless ones. much of the action from yesterday actually occured as a result of people just being assembled together at certain locations, not as a result of some actions of an affinity group. the fact something happened, or we briefly made the news (when the media is EVERYWHERE anyway), shouldn't be used as proof of it being effective.

Bring on the augian stables for this Hercules of redefinition, feed this Terrulian Joyce some pragmatricks; however, let me quote an enigmatic passage that prompts me to say this and show how his brinkmanship is preminiscent of what I am aiming at but can't pull itself away beyond make believe flexible but really fixed focus and mental stare at bowelbogbubbles below the navel:

> "Solidus uses flux as an abrasive engine, then, flowing sediments or deposition process is the non-dispositif abrasive machinery of the flux. This is what pseudo-flux is all about; it invokes not only fertilizing forces of the ground but also installs a new flux-oriented power formation within the regime of solidity with its new maneuvers and weapons, tricks and twists; the abrasive mechanisms (the actions of silts configured within the flux) save solidity from collapse by economically softening it, and weaponize solid through the stream of flux to erode, remove, grind and mainly appropriate any resistance (settled or streaming). Wittfogel's hydraulic monopoly merely covers a trivial part of pseudo-flux and its militant distributions. It is the deposition process (or denudational 'forcing') by which Mass leaves monolithic and coagulated systems, runs as the non-volumetric flux, the nonvolumetric pseudo-flux of solid-fertilizing particles (displanted Mass) controlled not by bed-load but uprooted by torrential crisscross of the flux."

> Dr. Philip S. Callahan's Paramagnetism: Rediscovering Nature's Secret Force of Growth gives key insight to the importance of understanding fundamental energy dynamics as a means of countering destructive corporate-state materialism. Callahan's rare work documents the need for bioenergy to transcend our reductionist addiction to petro-chemical farming. For instance Callahan has discovered that petrochemical agribusiness saturates plants with ammonia thereby actually attracting insects via chemico-electric infrared signals.189 Volcanic soil that is highly paramagnetic (attracted or resonates to magnetic fields) dramatically amplifies chi yin/yang resonance dynamics and is essential to restoring plant vitality and insect resistance.

I've pointed to what Nietzsche and Foucault regard as "authenticity." You can find Heidegger's version of this spelled out in his "reading" of a brief passage from Antigone. (Heidegger, Introduction to Metaphysics, pp. 158-76) Here's a sample:

> This, I take it, is "the inner truth and greatness" of National Socialism (p. 213). --- Neitzsche and Foucault claim that radical skepticism including the treatment of values as wholly subjective is the product of the working of this "authenticity." They also claim (inconsistently as Heidegger points out in the case of Nietzsche - pp. 213-4) - that this [[radical skepticism]] frees us for guilt free enjoyment of this "authenticity" - "the primordial pleasure to be found in causing pain." Ted). -----------

Hey Teddybud, forgive me for speaking up without knowing the work you cite (got no titles to hang on my name either) but here's a take on 'from the ground up', etcetera from a definitional point of view for ya/yall (since, as I've only just learned, to define is divine); wouldn't and couldn't radical subjectivity have to be identical with authenticity if it cared to lay claim to consistent closure (never mind satisfaction now nor why we can have ident- and authentical but not subjectical . . . . is that cause nobody invented phone connections that translate the rockyer frequencies into acceptibly intelligible protocol? Just too pre-animystically lumpy?)? ----- Apart from what Heidegger might have meant here methinks so and furthermore that the most 'equivaluable' 'tabulatability' properties (and other horsey hi de ho - away we go with objectivity in tow .... hi-jack prevention stimulus) articulable could only thus be housed in a one (made [[one]] by many) piece logic construct, (.. . . . so stop your projection of all that low blow, ... can't let you drag me up cause I don't wanna grow). Surely one of us now stands accused of a badmouthing here so it's off to the wash and wipe . .. . with which one of us again? And was he ever really one of us? I am saying that allowing for the sorta ultra subjectivity allocation I think Heidegger might, or in any case, if you ask me, should have meant here we will see tolerances set narrowly close and careful enough to help each (broken up and away into subjectivity sort of) superjacked subject soon reach and learn (to work it's valves, membranes, borders and) it's limits (from the ground on up anyone?), learning to stub it's toes in a preferably ground breaking and (if rocky probably) waterholding capacity improving way early on enough to toe the line perfectly by the time the on your toes period of life rolls around. (not to speak of the long toe sidestep [[sliding sidejump if you really want to shoccer it to them]] segment since though stepping on somebody's IS but the long boobytrap like ones are, as far as I know [[mental note: google 'having long toes']] maso skitsum vs 'stepping on toes' [[saditch 'm]] a not yet anglified dutschism schism till further notice).
ps: Marx on Shakespeare on money: "fraternisation of impossibilities". .. well aint that like power turning to powder, deceitful violence turning to beneficial and fecundating force, pride to humility. It's nought but a turning of the trying tiring and tired tide

My resulting data indicated that all of these clusters are located in areas where copper is virtually absent in the food chain. Furthermore, I identified the presence of high levels of certain radioactive metal species in those environments, which had invariably resulted from toxic discharges vented out of the military munitions production/testing ranges or oil/gas well sites that were centrally located within all of these cluster environments. ------- In this respect, the lone case of BSE that has emerged in Washington state, has probably stemmed from the fact that this cow had been imported from the copper deficient pastures of Alberta Canada into an area where the most intensive radioactive metal pollution has occurred in the USA – around the Hanford plutonium nuclear processing plant. ------ For further details see the Articles on this website and the Red Flags website.

After many many months of work and misscommunication, the Indymedia United States of America site http://us.indymedia.org/en/ is online. It's got a nice design (piet: yeah, rite) and folks should use it. We need to start promoting it more on indymedia.org as a place for US indymedia news. The idea was to take more of the news off of the main global site which was specifically US focused.

bounced LBOpost: Re: Energy article on Spiked -- James Greenstein james@communistbanker.com: "Not even the most utopian environmentalists are suggesting that we can store electricity for general use."---- he posts this to draw our attention to such

simple tec vs electricity storage - The latter might be just about as toxic as nuclear energy and equally 'misnomericyst'. Electricity storage is messy, hard and bad counsel. but why not be modest and simply store kinetic energy?????? ---- For example*(s)*: use wind water/wave whatever power to lift/hoist a giant weight and make it bear down on a hydraulic spout/pump/turbine in times of demand for such reserves, ... or load big giant springs for the same purpose. -------- Possibilities are endless unless you are looking for the bigger bang (the only reason nuclear energy ever got to be given such an oxymoronic name by the promotors thereof . .. . as a cover for coveting deadly and craven crime commitment capabilities aimed at a segment of creation they overlook being part of themselves and thus betray for the brief and fleeting kick of tecto-, thanatoni- and titanically primal power).

Other example: imagine a fixed point in the sky, a helistop with block, tackle and seat at rope end; now depending on the heigth a descendant would need extra weight to get the curve started, compensate for the heavyer than himself ropelength initially and at the end of the ride brake a runaway of the reverse situation .. . or use the latter to charge for the next run of course.

Now, Wessel di Wesseli is an odd Begian recluse maverick engineer/artist who has been looking to fund an experiment for about 20 years including appearances on national tv, yet he has no web presence to speak of *(the little that was there has mostly diseappeared again, this is the one left: geocities.com/Paris/9974/accordeo.htm - even my earlier discussion is gone due to a misplacement of a june 2003 file. He applies similar principles operative in my example but prefers 10 story acquarium with circuitous rail (wide one side for full accordeon parts going up and a narrow on other side for closing and closed ones moving downward). I am not sure if the bellow like airbodies are held in sequence rigidly (structure itself, besides airpressure, playing a role in the 'breathing') or if only the bottom pole needs anchoring but the air is free to leave the ones that collapse/compress and enter those travelling in opposite directions which inflate/open.

Submerged bellow/balloon/buoy circuits
the one on the left will stand still for sure but will the one on the right do so too???

Could a friendly enoug engineer calculate what the net difference would be between slender and wide models (depthvariable versions) ??? -- And will intelligent airlock use suffice and eliminate the need for structure to guide open- and closing of bellows altogether?????? . .. . Thanks .. .

In other words, the question is at what point does equilibrium/break even point occur (standstill; energy needed to deflate and pull full ones under = that delivered by full ones [[on the way up]] minus that needed to pul the bottom ones open) and starting at what load point (amount of stories, flexbodies) is the buoying force 'driving' the inflated ones large enough to recover the investment before write off and small enough to fall short of becoming prone to problematic bellowpunctures?

> They controlled the money system that granted credit to war and not to peace production. They controlled the money that controlled the nation slaves. They chose a 20th century of war and bloodshed that had promised peace and prosperity to my grand-dad Adelard Turmel's generation born under the banner of abundance. (Louis Even's great book: Sous le signe de l'abondance). > Dennis Redmond: The Left has to push beyond moral categories, because every moral category turns, at its outer limit, into a property-claim, and ultimately into a confirmation of the commodity form we thought we were resisting. Imperial ownership is nine-tenths of all American morality.

John Thornton answers the, by his own admission but quotationally negated 'ignorant' banker:

> The machines the Luddites were smashing had existed for quite some time. They were at least 150 years old in their design. What they objected to was the reorganization of society through those particular machines. They destroyed frames owned by capitalists but not frames owned by producers.

> - Exhibitionism, Trolls and Indy Media kirsten anderberg 28 Oct 2004 02:18 GMT There is a serious problem with Independent Media Centers (IMCs) in the open comment areas. IMCs end up publishing as much content against freedom, racism, sexism, classism, etc., as they do for those things via the open comment areas. "Trolls," or people who stalk indy media sources and writers, work hard at publishing as much hate mail in comment areas on IMCs as the individual IMC editorial groups will allow or overlook. They do not deserve to be published, plain and simple. It is time the plug was pulled on the trolls. --------

I go: Overlapping mention of money, dust, uniformity, universals, anonymity and crime -- Seeing the way you argue here I suspect the fact that the old indymain archives are nowhere to be found might not entirely be undue to your efforts??? On the one hand you claim positive ID from those intent on commenting might be a good idea but on the other your site features a masked man ready to shoot, peas, rocks, missiles, all the same thing to me; I cast broad, pick up rocks, crush and wet them, but don't let fly till then. -------- Ubiquitous things are often taken for granted and are likely to appear in so many shades, nuances and graduations that they prove difficult to classify and a challenge to converse over intelligently with for profound purposes too clutsy a tool like language, soooo concerned with the morphology and brilliance of ice berg tips. So, what props the thing up in the first place is left out, suppressed and anonymous but nevertheless underlies a lot of what lingers with the almost forgotten gods, which require a reverence for nature and embeddiment gone out of style in citified surroundings (treepeople is real homeopathy and let's hope they got the potency rite), the best guarantee to make biodiversity flourish. Legalistic battles, on the other hand raise fingers attempting to pinpoint defaming ones. But such fingers are about as useful the ones trying to stop a dyke that broke loose. I explained how complexes can be triggered and to do so within sight of a neighbouring hotspot conflict may just be the right kind of attraction to divert attention from and defuse it; influence from a safe but bridgeable distance, how's that for a resolution recipe?. -------- Anonymity is one of the biggest blessings if you can deal with the widest possible egolessness contained in amorph polypotential liberating minerals and therewith mimic the ongoing yet primordial and ever first act of 'terrestrialic organicizing' which begins with sets of single cells. -------- You can't have your cake and eat it too. Irresponsible behaviour remains close cousin to legitimate resistance; A large part of anonymity's appeal is misbehaviour's impunity. Let me mention an aspect that has crept up on us over the centuries but lies at the root of present day culture clashes. The anonymity the world's monies has evolved to, away from very closely timed, specified forms with a thus tightly monitored identity works out as a facade covering for the disrespect vital kinds of limits are assaulted with; yes, you read right, money has become an assault weapon cause the political process has become indentured to incorporative subjection; there are many efforts to wrestle free of such troubles.

> washingtonpost.com June 13, 2004 ---- She also explains—in a fresh and fascinating way—how Krasniqi and the KLA sucked the United States and NATO into their nasty war. It was the most cynical and savage of public relations tricks. As Sullivan explains it, the KLA attacked and killed Serbian military and police, knowing full well that Milosevic would retaliate in a way that would nauseate the West.
> publishersweekly.com May 31, 2004 Stacy Sullivan is terrific in detailing the life of Florin Krasniqi, a Kosovar Albanian who emigrated illegally to the U.S. via Mexico in 1988, and took it upon himself to get the KLA off the ground once Milosevic's intentions (and the inefficacy of nonviolent resistance) became clear to him.

Bin Laden's message to the US

> http://portland.indymedia.org/en/2004/10/301301.shtml - "We agreed with the leader of the group, Mohammed Atta, to perform all attacks within 20 minutes BEFORE [President George W.] Bush and his administration were aware of what was going on. And we never knew that the commander-in-chief of the American armed forces would leave 50,000 of his people in the two towers to face those events by themselves when they were in the most urgent need of their leader." --- my 2 cents: the passage cited ought to be changed/ corrected to make any sense. ---- the word 'before' (put in caps above) ought to read after of course and can then be taken to mean the countering crew (yes they fucking well were hitting back at democrisy and good for all of us, the US not excluded for once) expected to be chased after 20:3 minutes!!!!!! ------- But Bush did a Hitleresque thing and let this equivalent of van der Lubbe (Reichstag set alighter) do as he planned and pleased. ------ Looks like Bin Laden is not adding any fuel to Bushfire this time though does it?

> Bin Laden: We had agreed with the chief amir [leader - of the 11 September hijackers] Mohammed Atta that he should accomplish all the operations within 20 minutes before Bush and his administration could take notice. ---- It never occurred to us that the supreme commander of the US armed forces would leave 50,000 of his citizens in the two towers to face those great horrors alone, at a time when they needed him badly. ------- my 2 cents again: that first line doesn't jive the second unless you change it to: . .. . .after bush was given notice . . . .. especially in combination with the mention of having (bin given) 3 times as much time as expected; hence he expected some americans to have 20 minus some minutes to scram and others 20:3 to try and shoot the plane out of the air or throw a lasso around it's nose or something. ---- Storal of the mory: Not all cowboys and camel riders were created equal ..and they tend to set traps for each other when the testosterone reaches levels that require yet again, a peace and respite affording bloodletting.

> "within 20 minutes before Bush and his administration noticed." --- Juan Cole cites and accepts but I stick to my judgement: meaningless phrase that could be stretched from minutes to weeks without corrupting plausibility --- The talk about being "free persons" (ahrar) and fighting for "liberty" (hurriyyah) for the Muslim "nation" (ummah) seems to me a departure. The word "hurriyyah" or freedom has no classical Arabic or Koranic resonances and I don't think it has played a big role in his previous statements.

http://wizbangblog.com/archives/004122.php posted the above comments there also, to an item with 13 trackbacks - it's a right wing (and pretty fancy) place (with visiting lefties like AZmildman); the blogosphere will soon, if it isn't already, be righty-dominated, co-opted and unaffordable, starting to look like the somanyeth ex-art colony.

leftleaning: politicalstrategy.org/archives/000667.php

this next bit cost me a bit of puzzling, it's rather contrarian and I suprise myself with the occult conspirational connotations of the figures 'in play':

politicalstrategy.org/archives/000670.php the irony of Bin Laden (on associating Bush with a goat); I add: hey, if you ask me the mystery of the inversion (before should be after and taken should begiven in my 'mirroreversanalysis') making the 20 minutes divided by 3 ('times the time needed') a 6.6666666 connotation which I reckon goes to the account of mr Bush for, to wit, his missing a pass flying straight at him, ducking it even, sticking his nose into a book on goats held upside down makes for Irony's profoundly sublime (not to mention synchroscientific) subtext, indeed. -- ps: I expect Michael Hoffman to spin some other sorts of sense from this soon. ----- ps2: if this is all too cryptic for ya see a larger explanation here: (dc item link added there but you are now in the state of the arts version) ------ ps3 is a wordwise well hung big lung affair, I suggest reading these 2 sentences (and it's many asides) a colour at a time, in sequence (the thought expressed is very similar to a yarn I spun in last issue): I might add that the fact Bush can't admit IT HAPPENED ON HIS WATCH (other than in a form of stark denial regarding this indisputable fact turned around, over and out as firmly promised impossibility projected into a, to more normal folks at least, nevertheless never with such certainty securable future [[He does this the same way some folks {{{more than others}}} tend to quasi announce future misdeeds they are sincerely intent on {{{and in this veiled way upfront about}}} in the form of accusations about suffered ill-treatment; many examples throughout the ME]], of course cocksure rather than cautious christians are gonna suck this rite out of his ass OK) is perfectly consistent with the way the man came to be a toppolitical wardog in the fist place: he lied using overwhelming amounts of propaganda fueling money (money fueled propaganda) to outgun his more truthful opponent (she wasn't wrong saying that crime rate actually dropped at the time). Bush squeezed the poor, making crime-rates skyrocket (circulo vicioso ad infinitum) justifying investment in armor and law-enforcement which in turn imposed exactly the sort of straight jacket the Jeworgyman himself so richly deserves other than a swift buttkick. History has already bore me out on this.

http://portland.indymedia.org/en/2004/11/301618.shtml is osama a lefty? --- 4th comment: Ossama is a Functionalist, as is Bush 01.Nov.2004 23:36 karlof1 link Actually, after reading a transcript of his latest message, I would say he's somewhat center/right in our political spectrum -- a conservative/ traditionalist/ "nationalist" (for the Ummah--worldwide Islam) -- who is acting in a very rational way from his perspective> Luke saw his family fried by The Empire and joined The Rebellion. Personally, my reaction on 9/11 was that the US was hit with a counterstrike in retaliation for some previous Imperial Crime, which one of many I didn't know at the time. The 21st Century will become the French Revolution writ large as Monopoly Capitalism vaults through Overshoot as Sinks and Sources collapse and peak. Bush and Bin-Laden are only actors in an already moving drama and will be long gone at the end of a century that will see massive chaos and an overturning of the prevailing paradigm. The Hard Landing is on its way;it's only a matter of how hard. -----

I go: I am not sure he really understands how counterproductive he is; bankruptcies are good for one thing: centralizations of the secretive kind and all he does is of great service and benefit to the equal inversions perpetrating, truly offensive but socalled 'defense' industries --- ps: a high profile islam critic, icon of irreverence, film and website (www.theovangogh.nl) maker and columnist in holland was just shot (I'd be suprised if it was an animal rights activist once again) --http://newswire.indymedia.org/pt/newswire/

2004/11/813243.shtm ---- http://english.aljazeera.net/.htm And so it has appeared to some analysts and diplomats that the White House and us are playing as one team towards the economic goals of the United States, even if the intentions differ. And it was to these sorts of notions and their like that the British diplomat and others were referring in their lectures at the Royal Institute of International Affairs. (When they pointed out that) for example, al-Qaida spent $500 000 on the event, while America, in the incident and its aftermath, lost – according to the lowest estimate – more than 500 billion dollars. Meaning that every dollar of al-Qaida defeated a million dollars by the permission of God, besides the loss of a huge number of jobs. As for the size of the economic deficit, it has reached record astronomical numbers estimated to total more than a trillion dollars. And even more dangerous and bitter for America is that the Mujahideen recently forced Bush to resort to emergency funds to continue the fight in Afghanistan and Iraq, which is evidence of the success of the blee-until-bankruptcy plan – with God's permission. It is true that this shows that al-Qaida has gained, but on the other hand, it shows that the Bush administration has also gained, something of which anyone who looks at the size of the contracts acquired by the shady Bush administration-linked mega-corporations, like Haliburton and its kind, will be convinced. And it all shows that the real loser is...you. ------ Obama's precursor Osama xymphora: While the timing of the broadcast makes it clear that Osama is playing right into Bush's election campaign by reminding Americans of why they instinctively look to Bush for security from the likes of bin Laden, the sly attack on Bush's goat book reading leaves enough ambiguity that Bush can argue that bin Laden is actually campaigning for Kerry, thus further increasing the value of bin Laden's words for Bush. Brilliant. Bin Laden continues to earn his pay.

> serendipity.li/wot/obl_int.htm Usama bin Laden Says the Al-Qa'idah Group had Nothing to Do with the 11 September Attacks Interview published in newspaper Ummat Karachi, 2001-09-28 The U.S. has no friends, nor does it want to keep any because the prerequisite of friendship is to come to the level of the friend or consider him at par with you. America does not want to see anyone equal to it. It expects slavery from others. Therefore, other countries are either its slaves or subordinates. However, our case is different. We have pledged slavery to God Almighty alone and after this pledge there is no possibility to become the slave of someone else. If we do that it will be disregardful to both our Sustainer and his fellow beings. Most of the world nations upholding their freedom are the religious ones, which are the enemies of the United States, or the U.S. itself considers them as its enemies. --- found at http://portland.indymedia.org/en/2004/11/301713.shtml

Jean Plantu images.google.com/images?q=plantu is a french cartoonist who met Arafat, they came up with a design for a 1000 unit note of a *(brand)new money(brand)* uniting the monotheism (I suppose the decimals could even stand for each in turn, it is one of those 7 pronged chandeliers at the bottom [[bringing to mind associations with fruittrees pruned to grow along walls, wheels within wheels on common axes but certainly not internally consistent axes, they frequently turn out to be mere wheels as well]], then the middle stem gets a crossbeam to represent the cross and at the top it holds a moon; seems pretty realistic to me, considering another unification through fear wave seems upon us and the rocket analogy of the three faiths is nicely accomodated this way as well) and was in tv5 Kiosque showing his work; worth looking up. --

Of course there are some other views of this man: Shem vs Shaun, Gilgamesh vs Enkidu and Jacob vs Esau; it's the same battle over and over.

Above a certain level of testosterone the need to act and/or speak out becomes irrepressible, each version is genuinely lonely and looking for a match, expects, deathdefyingly brave, to be met with opposition that handles a similar calibur and degree, setting up conditions for either tragedy or a truely bonding heroism.

Each mode and means of being brings a form of challenge to bear that is bound for trouble under monopoly conditions.

Both warwhoop and provocation to debate are then (each from their own points of view) frustrated as soon as given by respective responses; the party that opts for uncomplicated physical violence is maddened by the deluge of words he interprets as abuse and the wordwielder calls the assault a barbaric substitute for sparring with arguments till a solution is found, in short he feels the 'counterplay' *(tegenspel; een woord dat nu zwaar onder vuur en tussen twee vuren geraakt is)*is foul.

This poor outcome happens very simply bycause the old rules are no less valid now than ever.

Just bycause we have these omnipotence memes leaving its religious confines (consider this a lament for monasteries and self imposed quarantines, purportedly to help attain purity) and liminally infecting everything, doesn't make them true.

If you throw a challenge, the challengees gets to choose the arms.

A universal law that works in favor of the religious and the wastes of the earth (hardship and renunciation confirmed rather than questioned soon turn into subjection and imposition), those who practice pecking orders of destruction and project good times for all, the whole way down their parasitic ranks.

Haven't heard from George Gilder for a long time now; I have just made my first experience with wikipedia and I think the man's argument about monopolies breaking off (Life after television) must be revised. -------- Yes the decentral and distributive effects cause a crumbling but it happens at the edges and takes away (lots of the better thinking power, desire and focus to) impact the core of it which is consequently strenghtened what with many of the pesky attackers bent on airing it out and taking the whole cloak and dagger charade apart and to the compost heap being distracted with outgrowing them but starting from all too fragmented niches, doing all too parallel work, paradoxically the pattern that needs to take root and set out to grow footfallsupport, in other words, what must happen regarding more basic needs, duties and pleasures like multipermaculti pleaching palace planting.

wiki, open anything such as publishing, source and especially politics, the multidimensionality of accounting, all are examples of what I'd call overlapcoverage (dutch afford a fun pun: overlappingsbedekenis with meaning and blanket therefore comfort implied unless you live in america and associate blankets with biological warfare).

The religions that took cue from each other chose consecutive shortcuts to bigger and better dependency in the end they'll succeed choking freedom preemptively before there's even a whisper of a promise for it left.

Lessay, the jews used money (and deftness with it, with the cook[able] books) to regulate social stratification and got slavery to such a sorry state of affairs people would rather die when the hint and hope of a better life after death turned to hype and they massively passively selfsacrificed and suicided cause life after death no longer meant green after dust (given time rain and shine).

Now we get a next cut corner and throat activity step up short circuit, martyrdom in the form of the most upsetting disturbing acts of shoestring budget atrocity; the pinnacle of which is the plain daylite downtown amsterdam murder of Theo van Gogh, a more jovial and honest fella than whom will not be found. > --Britain's real role in the world is a great betrayal of people in this country. I be-lieve they expect the government to uphold the moral values abroad that most people uphold in their daily lives. This is partly why, as I argue in this book, the public is in reality seen by elites as the great threat to pursuing their priorities. In the chapters that follow, I look at some of the major foreign policies of the Blair government: its illegal wars; its support for a 'war against terrorism' that is ... acting as a pretext for a new phase of global intervention and US imperial power; its support for repressive elites and state terrorism; its arms exports that help sus-tain repressive governments; its aim to reshape the global economy; and its ex-traordinary new role as recognised international expert on state propaganda (mis-labelled 'spin'). I also tell the story of several long-forgotten past British interventions revealed in now declassified documents – in Iran, Malaya, British Guiana and Kenya. These interventions were much more brutal than usually believed and make exceedingly worrying reading – in Kenya alone, 150,000 Africans died as a result of British policy in the 1950s. These interventions reveal a contempt for grand ethical prin-ciples that has passed easily from Conservative to Labour and from the colonial era to the present.<

In 1984, after I directed a feature film called "Frontiers," about a Dutch journalist who goes abroad to interview a terrorist and discovers his own violent side, Mr. Van Gogh accused me of "selling out my Jewish identity," although there was not a single Jewish character in the picture. Writing elsewhere about Jewish writers or filmmakers, he made Holocaust-tinged jokes like: "Hey, it smells like caramel today--well then, they must be burning the diabetic Jews." How about personalized affinity stretch and tolerance bureaus? Graduation is a funny thing, not only does it allow, nay, even seems even to be THE essential property of multiply transacting. The scrupleless who sport very slack settings that fail to draw the line somewhere show no mercy with the proverbial frog and get it into some much too hot water sailing under the flag of imperceptibility, their take on family membership equals those who cut the limb they sit on, circumcise women, etcetera.

To leak and slip is not macho, nor is acknowledging limits but a happy combo of both is key to attaining the happy medium between gentle and firm.

Do I buy the iron I want for my musical rockgrinder at the smelter that is otherwise, at the same time and also busy selling to Chrysler, NASA Carlyle, Haliburton, etcetera?

If all folks had the time, leisure ways and means to become principled before transacting we'd be croaking cacophappily alongside (and yet with) each other instead of living in a more and more -- and in places like Holland, on some of the most naturally blessed swampwon soil in the world fork-riced-ache!!! -- (all too literally too) cutthroat world. Consider these circumscryptic arguments aimed at previving digital dutch decency with a difference. ------- The transacting that was truly common during 'our' socalled 'golden age' now calls for ethically prudent pruning of archaic*(?)* weaponry production driven success to be thrown in for good, truly sharable and thus o so timely measure. ------- Back then a 1000 currencies circulated, a decidedly unspecialized and dilute form of stock exchange and voting rights exercise in one, enDOWing trade with the added advantage of preempting the all too infectious herdhype, conspirationally exclusive and manipulatory remnant of all thing raidlike which (due to the then [[as now]] as yet unpurged colonial component) bore the spores of its (meanwhile psychotically [[and again literally]] split) descendants, to wit: politics and media. The kind of concommitant clean trouble (allocalluviality - high quality [[fresh]] mud) free*(ing)* success I've kept on harping about digitally for 7 years now is the preliminary and prerequisite (workforce absorbing and vital industry = DustInTree) that will allow one to make entering the beknighted realm of universal validity and proverbial repute as simple as pressing 'enter' once underway.

RECAP: money was once (already) a medium uniting politics and levels of purely nonmanipulated pools in an open to all read only public scrutiny; poolers that transact can only withdraw as much as their combined pool plus whatever good will comes forth through smart publicity for timely thus appealing initiative.

It strikes me that financial constructs are and were always already based on reputation, the trick is not only to determine its components, the contributing hypes hysterias, collective amnesias cultural privilege and bias as well as the straightforward bulkily as well as minute yet physical, much harder to hide or falsify ones but also their constant flux and adjustments; it's a learning process.

Central, we must not forget is a word we use for something there are a great many widely dispersed copies of and with the redundancy of local limits and variables comes protection against such an amassment should some evil parasite manage to impute being spokesperson, prophet (let alone last) or priest no matter how politely they may begin media; however, it lacked a biospherically common current aspect; then, to make matters worse and maters mad (moo!!), monopoly won out and we are left with (special interest) manipulated media and politics.

such representation; The are doubling, bedeviling and attempting to take the place of distributed constituents who form a whole only symbolically and alliances peacemeal, at least for a very long time to come cause the UN is pretty much a sham and ashambles at the mo wouldn't you agree?

Modestified desire dictates: 1 - Proper scale and freedom weighting (locale is where all the action is, leaving none for collections of them and/or those trying to interpret them and/or speak in their name 'at the top', truly a crown held stable and fed by a root). 2 - Partial overlap and patchquilt checks and balances add up to multiple almost but not quite duplicates that allow localization, disallow traceless corruption and thus will slow casino capitalism down which is good.

Just as biospherical/solar revenues differ per region, even garden, so should a nonstandard multiple node systemic help checking at all stops and starts along the way; it is thus the bases that push and pull the more and more purely passive levels of open to scrutiny by read all but only third party non-manipulated -- non-partitioned global and ocean like reserves. Transacters can withdraw (from it) upon mutual consent as a minimum and only as much as what their combined contributions plus whatever good will comes forth through smart publicity for timely thus appealing initiative amounts to.

It strikes me that financial constructs are and were always already based on reputation (a fear and vengeance inspiring one anybody? Plantu, jokingly designed a thousander note together with the late Arafat; I have reproduced an impression of it and 'plantu(e)d' it at the top of my blog) - the trick is to determine ALL of its components (the contributing hypes hysterias, collective amnesias, cultural privilege and bias AS WELL AS the straightforwardly bulky,perhaps minute but at least tangible and thus harder to hide or falsify ones) and of course their constant flux and adjustments; it's a learning process (and a dizzying one given the on/off poleshifts by all psychological placetaking and making accounts). Central, we must not forget is a word we use for thoroughfares and rapids of things and beings there are a great many widely dispersed copies of.

Christianity is decidedly split about choosing for it yet wanting to hold onto the safety and redundancy of local limits and variables that spell protection against some devilishly evil rivalling charismatics (and/or parasites, depending on day and age) that manage to impute being spokesperson, prophet (let alone last) or priest for the amassment, the ag- into congregation which they, at the same time, cause with their own global aspirations and pride in demographic success (monotheism's great big promoting yet selfdestruction devoice) no matter how politely they may begin such representation; they are doubling, bedeviling and attempting to generalize, uniformate and if (not immediately) possible (sooner or later) militarize (preferably treehoused and photosynthesis conscious) distributed constituents who only form a whole (as in the teeth and fists of time) symbolically but real alliances peacemeal, ... at least for a very long time to come . . . . cause the UN is pretty much a sham and ashambles at the mo wouldn't you agree?

> "Bush bedevilment from Florida has a longer history than most people know: It was Bush's CIA job to organize the Cuban community in Miami for the invasion. The Cubans were trained as marksmen by the CIA. Bush at that time lived in Texas. Hopping from Houston to Miami weekly, Bush spent 1960 and '61 recruiting Cubans in Miami for the invasion. That is how he met Felix Rodriguez. You may remember Rodriguez as the Iran-contra CIA agent who received the first phone call telling the world the CIA plane flown by Gene Hasenfus had crashed in Nicaragua. As soon as Rodriguez heard that the plane crashed, he called his long-time CIA supervisor, George Bush. Bush denied being in the contra loop, but investigators recently obtained copies of Oliver North's diary, which documents Bush's role as a CIA supervisor of the contra supply network. In 1988 Bush told Congress he knew nothing about the illegal supply flights until 1987, yet North's diary shows Bush at the first planning meeting Aug. 6, 1985. Bush's "official" log placed him somewhere else. Such double sets of logs are intended to hide Bush's real role in the CIA; to provide him with "plausible deniability." The problem is, it fell apart because too many people, like North and Rodriguez, have kept records that show Bush's CIA role back to the 1961 invasion of Cuba. (Source: The Washington Post, 7/10/90)."- > stcynic.com/cgi-bin/mt-tb.cgi/771 November 10, 2004 --Theo Van Gogh and Theocratic Terrorism ---- Hat tip to Andrew Sullivan for providing this link to the short film Submission, by Theo Van Gogh. Van Gogh was murdered last week by radical Islamic thugs in the Netherlands, presumably because of this film, which depicts the brutal oppression of women in fundamentalist Islamic culture. In the context of the war on terrorism and our battle with Al Qaeda, it's easy to see the entire thing as a big abstract, but the truth remains that we are locked in a battle with the most reactionary and theocratic force in the world today and there are real victims of their oppression. I just finished reading Azar Nafisi's Reading Lolita in Tehran. I strongly urge everyone to read this book to put a human face on the struggle against theocracy. If we are going to rail against theocratic movements here at home, let us be consistent in opposing them everywhere, especially in their most brutal forms. Posted by Ed at November 10, 2004 12:38 PM -- Trackback Pings -- -- Comments: Thank you so much for this comment: you are one of the very, very few people on the web who is at least trying to be as hard on Islamic fundies as you are on Christian Fundies. Generally, one has to read the right-wing sites to hear about Muslim atrocities and the left-wing ones to hear about Christian censorship campaigns. ---- While it IS important to keep in mind that Muslim fundies are more prone to violence than Christian Fundies, the fact that the coverage of the overall problem is so polarized is a symptom of the same problems that lead to Van Gough's death AND Bush's re-election.

If you're interested in restricting your technology use to only that which could be described as "primitive" and living nomadically, you might be more interested in these folks: rewild.org. They plan to live nomadically in the interior of Alaska, hunting and gathering only. They believe domestication, any form of agriculture at all and any form of environment modification is morally decrepit and leads inexorably towards taker-like cultures, so they're eschewing it all.

> Dutch Government Snub to Open Source -- Posted by Tom Graham on 12 Dec 2004 - 21:46 | 36 comments--- Open Source advocates have kicked up a fuss over a contract given to Microsoft in the Netherlands this week. The Dutch government had been negotiating with Microsoft for desktop software, valued at €120 per PC. The contract is for five years, and covers over a 1/4 million government PCs. The deal could be worth as much as $200m to Microsoft. The Register notes that the Dutch government negotiated in private with Microsoft on a massive contract that is required by law to go up for public tender. The article also highlights the fact that in 2002 the Dutch government voted "to guarantee that by 2006 all IT systems in the public sector would operate on open standards".

While you agree, you are lovers and when it is over, anything but friends. Civilization is a conspiracy. Modern life is the silent compact of comfortable folk to keep up pretences. A diplomat is a man who always remembers a woman's birthday but never remembers her age. Facing it, always facing it, that's the way to get through. Face it. If the Lord Almighty had consulted me before embarking upon Creation, I should have recommended something simpler. The future influences the present just as much as the past. Classical shia-Muslim concepts where disregarded and replaced with ideas and slogans from the non-Muslim world. The result, as Ervand Abrahamian writes in his essay collection “Khomeinism”, was closer to Latin-American populism than to fundamentalism. .... The last election in Turkey was won by the Party of Justice and Development (AKP), a party with Islamist roots. Under their rule, Turkey wants a European Union membership, and has conducted a series of democratic reforms. While the country has a long way to go, especially concerning minorities, it is today ironically the secular Kemalists who play the role of reactionaries in the country today, while the “Islamists” are promoting reforms towards a – that's right – Western-styled liberal democracy. It is tempting to wish for such an Islamism also in Arab countries, and perhaps we can already see it. In the September edition of the Washington Report of Middle East Affairs, Charley Reese points out an interesting fact:

> most of the reformists in the Middle East the last years have been Islamists, and sometimes even Islamic fundamentalists. They have provided social services where the governments have failed and has often been they who demand democratic elections and honest government.

This is a piece of the jigsaw that needs to be included to understand Islamism, and – perhaps more importantly – to understand the popularity of Islamism. As a conclusion a quote by the controversial Tunisian Islamist Rached Ghannouchi might be fitting:

> "There is no room for differentiating between citizens. Complete equality is the basis of any new Muslim society. The only legitimacy is the one provided by elections. Freedom comes before Islam and it is the step leading to Islam." ------ Ghannouchi lives in exile. -------

> http://shirky.com/writings/group_user.html Group As User: Flaming and the Design of Social Software — about what we can learn from the history of flaming in mailing lists and other conversational spaces: Flaming is one of a class of economic problems known as The Tragedy of the Commons. Briefly stated, the tragedy of the commons occurs when a group holds a resource, but each of the individual members has an incentive to overuse it. (The original essay used the illustration of shepherds with common pasture. The group as a whole has an incentive to maintain the long-term viability of the commons, but with each individual having an incentive to overgraze, to maximize the value they can extract from the communal resource.) In the case of mailing lists (and, again, other shared conversational spaces), the commonly held resource is communal attention. The group as a whole has an incentive to keep the signal-to-noise ratio low and the conversation informative, even when contentious. Individual users, though, have an incentive to maximize expression of their point of view, as well as maximizing the amount of communal attention they receive. It is a deep curiosity of the human condition that people often find negative attention more satisfying than inattention, and the larger the group, the likelier someone is to act out to get that sort of attention. However, proposed responses to flaming have consistently steered away from group-oriented solutions and towards personal ones. The logic of collective action, alluded to above, rendered these personal solutions largely ineffective. Meanwhile attempts at encoding social bargains weren't attempted because of the twin forces of door culture (a resistance to regarding social features as first-order effects) and a horror of censorship (maximizing individual freedom, even when it conflicts with group goals.) The piece goes on to contrast wiki and weblogish ways of avoiding flaming, and uses that as input for suggesting a number of possible experiments with social form.

> November 06, 2004 The Tragedy of the Comments (posted by Kevin Marks) Clay's essay on the difference between the social dynamics of mailing lists and blogs expresses well something I've been trying to say for a while - that blogs work better for discussion than mailing lists, because the blogs are owned. Clay discusses flame wars rather than spam, but the issues are similar - people taking advantage of others' resources without recompense. When comments are turned on on blogs, they eventually fill up with flames and spam too, unless they are carefully maintained. If instead of commenting, you write a response on your blog, you are standing behind your words, and associating them with the rest of your writing. The social dynamics are very different; you think more before responding instead of posting a quick flame. You can't really spam, as you are only soiling your own garden. When I try to explain the point of Technorati to people, this hard-to-explain social subtlety is key - it tells you which people are linking to you from blogs, so you can go to their page, and see how what they say about you fits in with the > rest of their thoughts.

Here's an example for Clay's post on folksonomies. Posted by Kevinm martinus.dk/layout_pages/index_light.php?lang=uk

On Ayaan Hirsi Ali (advising her to find more inoffensive ways) -------- - I post:

> Observer: Since van Gogh's murder there have many calls for improved dialogue. But van Gogh was murdered for speaking out, the religious associates of his killer refuse to talk, and van Gogh's collaborator, Hirsi Ali, is in hiding, in fear of her life. The silence deafens the many words that have been written and spoken since that bloody Tuesday morning.

---- I go: Islam should be renamed to show it comes across as INTIMIDATION as much as it may cherish the illusion and try to project the impression/image/selfdelusion of being the highest and/or best form of SUBMISSION; this polarized reality rift rents and betrays the middle ground, renders it moot and ungratefully discarded, but the true and hard enough work lies in wait there nevertheless. In this climate of increasing irritability however, one that happens in none too small a part, by the way, due to the very shirking of what has always been and could soon much better still, again be working, our windows of opportunity are vibrating with blasts, besmeared by blood splatters and clouded by acrid smoke. No integration of grey dusts and moistures in sight. No food fed into the mute ladders of life's bottom rungs occupying, vast lifeform variety as well as majority boasting constituents or ours. That happens to be a few orders of magnitude worse than starving just our children, that's starving everything including not so obvious forebears or at least what's left of that deepest depths to loftiest hights spanning evolutionary chain of beings. ----------- OK, where was I? Right, the skits all monotheisms suffer. Islam is truly a world religion that took it's 'voor elk wat wils' (to each his own) strategy from forebears it emulated (Muhammed admonishes his followers to stick 'the book', meaning the old testament). Yet like them it tries to disallow others to take cues and off from it (Muhammed claims to be the last prophet etcetera). That in itself is a telltale for the schiz right there. In Mecca he made good his threat upon returning and that is the primary strength of Islam and any expansionary endeavor catering to folks afflicted with the higher testosterone levels caught in a vicious cycle of worsening conditions. The latter being the substrate compensatory dreams of glory can be fed the tired, weary, deprived, poor and oppressed unfortunates who find themselves having to cope upon it. No news here. This means/method split is a betrayal of what's plausibly and believably enough the best of Islam, to wit, the not so obvious and somewhat farfetched, not to say shaky accuracy of it's adherence to natural rhythm and peace, as the Quran Code folks like Jose Arguelles claim. ---------- That Muhammed's in the latter sense legit claims where taken for mad man's ravings in Vedic Mecca* made him lose his patience and to this day prevents his movement from claiming championship in matters like permaculture and regreening manmade deserts, etcetera. I can sympathize cause my rockdust based principles are regarded with much the same disdain and ridicule. *swordoftruth.com/swordoftruth/archives/byauthor/aditichaturvedi/vpopia3.html

> Aditi Chaturvedi: When Muhammad first started preaching his "new" religion the Meccans tolerated it as they had tolerated many such propounders of "new" religions before. However they were startled out of their tolerance when the small band of Islamists started to publicly ridicule the Vedic heritage of the Meccans and threatened to break down the idols, which were the pride of Mecca. At first they proceeded in a calm manner to Muhammad's uncle Abu Talib and told him that his nephew had "cursed our gods, insulted our religion, mocked our way of life and accused our revered forefathers of error. We request you to restrain him." ------ It should be pointed out that the Meccans NEVER said Muhammad could not preach his religion, all they asked was that in the true spirit of tolerance, he > ought to respect their way of life and religion, just as they were willing to let him uphold his. -------- But Muhammad continued insulting the Vedic heritage of the Meccans. He considered his epileptic fits as periods of divine revelation and his bitter invectives against the Vedic religion grew stronger.-------- In the spirit of their Vedic culture , they invited Muhammad to an open debate. It was soon obvious from the debates that Muhammad could not present arguments in a logical manner. He would lose his temper and resort to violent and insulting answers to the questioners. Soon after he claimed a divine revelation that instructed him not to participate in open debate, to evade questions, and if questioned by unbelievers to retire! (Quran 6:68-70) -------- Note: Works of P.N. Oak, D.S. Margoliouth and Sita Ram Goel have been used to compose this article.---------------- This clearly demonstrates the level of freedom women enjoyed in Vedic Arabia. Hind, who was the wife of Muhammad's chief enemy Abu Sufyan, herself participated in the battlefield. ------ Hind opposed Muhammad tooth and nail. She followed her husband to the battlefield and when Abu Sufyan surrendered Mecca to Muhammad without a fight she caught hold of him in the marketplace and cried: "KILL this fat greasy bladder of lard! What a rotten protector of the people" -- When Muhammad tried to baptise her & asked her not to commit adultery , She spat out the bitter words: "A free woman does not commit adultery!" How proud this woman was of the rights and privileges that her Vedic society had invested to her! -

All this illustrates that somebody who is intensely cruel and criminal will compensate for, distract from and hide this disposition with heavenly visions as lofty as possible

Anne Galloway at purse lip square jaw :::: Monday, December 6 ---- Ludic ? playful --- Flow, Seduction and Mutual Pleasures (pdf) by Torill Mortensen ---

> "The flow experience ... is one of achievement, not interaction, an achievement that is rewarding in itself, not through the rewards from others."

In contrast, Baudrillard holds up seduction as opposed to production, and Mortensen argues that the quest element in gaming is only seductive when it is unresolved; in other words, to solve the quest is to be productive, not seductive.

> "The social aspect of MUDs ensures that the quest of playing can never really be solved. Through the interaction of other players the story keeps changing and new elements are constantly added."

Continuing along these lines, Mortensen explains how some game admins choose to evolve the game-play as they go, keeping it flexible, open and mutually constituted. Not surprisingly, players who want a more ordered game universe in which they can gauge their own mastery against a set of fixed laws are frustrated by this sort of openness.--------- From this, Mortensen points out that players who derive their pleasure from mastery and control of the game - from being functional and productive - fit Csikzentmihalyi's theories on flow. On the other hand, players who value the social, interactive and uncertain nature of gaming fit Baudrillard's theories on seduction. And Baudrillard describes the former sort of functionalism as ludic but not playful:

> "Obviously, the ludic cannot be equated with having fun. With its propensity for making connections, the ludic is more akin to detective work. More generally it connotes networks and their mode of functioning, the forms of their permeation and manipulation. The ludic encompasses all the different ways one can 'play' with networks, not in order to establish alternatives, but to discover their state of optimal functioning."

--------- Sweet! In the attempt to reposition play as something not wasteful or frivolous, to establish it as a viable and valuable activity, theorists like Huizinga and Caillois turned play into something productive and functional - but not particularly playful or full of fun. As I've written many times before, I believe the sort of structural-fuctionalism found in Csikzentmihalyi, Huizinga and Caillois attracts folks interested in "social software" precisely because it meshes so well with traditional computer sytems thinking about networks and control. And as Mortensen explains, Csikzentmihalyi's theories on flow mesh nicely with ideas of the "self-made man" or the individual who works hard to shape her or his life. Unfortunately, this view tends to ignore external social and cultural power relations that influence quality of life. ---------- By focussing on the ludic - by measuring the pleasure of games and play by functional and productive criteria - we miss the chaotic, voluptuous, and seductive qualities of play. As Mortensen concludes, the real dangers of gaming are not exposure to violence or social isolation, but rather in promoting a "society where delight is used to reach goals" and seduction is rendered empty and meaningless.

> “That second, alias domain was registered as a favor to brothers Mohammed, Omar, and Ali by Jeff Reed, who runs a Texas hosting company called CIATech Solutions. The letters "CIA" were cause for suspicion to Joseph of Martini Republic, the author of the post from which Prof Cole spins his insinuations. All this and more is explained in two notes from Jeff Reed that were posted in the comments to the original Martini Republic post at http://martinirepublic.com/item/979. It turns out the "CIA" in this case stands for Complex Internet Applications. The irony is that the domain of Riverbend (riverbendblog.com) -- the bitterly anti-American blog by a 20-something Iraqi woman and the blog hailed by Prof Cole as more aligned with prevailing public opinion in Iraq -- was also registered by CIATech. -----------

The next commenter sports an early sample to tip and turn the tide of meaning stuffed into the therewith heavily laden expression 'PC' over and around into it's opposite meaning, namely anti-americanism:

> "Posted by db at December 14, 2004 03:36 AM Great job Jeff -- keep blasting against Cole and those who claim Iraqis who aren't PC (ie anti-American) enough aren't "real" Iraqis."

----- another commenter (Andrew Tyndall) has sharper (and much 'dryer' [[cleaner]] analysis):

> "Cole's final paragraph is actually optimistic about how the blogosphere--including, presumably, IraqTheModel although again he does not mention it by name--can withstand such similar manipulation. He cites technorati.com approvingly as one mechanism to keep the medium transparent."

> Weekly Organ of the Communist Party of India (Marxist) Vol. XXVII No. 24 June 15, 2003 Mishra’s claim of shared vision obviously rests on the ignoble Sangh Parivar’s version of history. According to them: “Just as the Hindus of India are fighting for their survival in the very land of their origin and forefathers, so too are the Jews of Israel confronting the very same threats to the nation that is theirs by historical and religious birthright. Hindus and Jews both face exactly the same danger: Islam…. The desire to reassert what is their rightful pride in land, culture and religion has awakened in the heart of the common Israeli and Indian. The results are obvious, the unabashedly Jewish Likud Party was voted into power in Israel and the political party that represents the reemergence of Hinduism, the BJP, has been voted into power in India. Considering the import of shared experiences, ideas and situations that links Indians and Israelis, it is about time that solid chains of friendship were forged” (Aditi Chaturvedi, India and Israel: Destined for True Friendship, March 22, 1999, at http://www.swordoftruth.com/.. ; this website is funded by yet another Zionist organisation: The Freeman Centre for Strategic Studies, Huston, Texas, USA).

> The need to recover control over our own credit history is uppermost in my mind - but I don't think this is way it will be done. The practical issues surrounding the cryptography questions, and the massive damage to privacy this particular scheme would result in effectively makes it dead in the water. ------- These cryptographic requirements are horrendous when looked at in detail. For example, being able to prove validity of a transaction history involves being able to prove that _none_ of the many signature keys involved in more than a trivial part of this has _ever_ been compromised or become technologically obsoleted by Moore's law. ------- Let's try to be a bit more realistic - the kind of info security which makes cryptography work on this kind of scale doesn't happen in the real world. -------- Would I have time to screen my transactions with firms I think may be Microsoft's competitors out of this record first, if this level of disclosure became commonplace ? ------- Proving that such compromise has _not_ occurred is, as I understand it, so close to impossible as not to make any difference. -------- The privacy issue is even worse. In order to get credit from Microsoft, is this saying I have to divulge details of transactions with firms which I don't know, but which Microsoft knows, are Microsoft's competitors ? Let alone what Microsoft finds out about me during this process.

: : : : : : : : the redraft: How about personalized affinity stretch and tolerance bureaus? Graduation is a funny thing, not only does it allow, nay, even seems even to be THE essential property of multiply transacting. The scrupleless who sport very slack settings that fail to draw the line somewhere show no mercy with the proverbial frog and get it into some much too hot water sailing under the flag of imperceptibility, their take on family membership equals those who cut the limb they sit on, circumcise women, etcetera. -------- To leak and slip is not macho, nor is acknowledging limits but a happy combo of both is key to attaining the happy medium between gentle and firm. ------------ Do I buy the iron I want for my musical rockgrinder at the smelter that is otherwise, at the same time and also busy selling to Chrysler, NASA Carlyle, Haliburton, etcetera? ------- If all folks had the time, leisure ways and means to become principled before transacting we'd be croaking cacophappily alongside (and yet with) each other instead of living in a more and more ------ and in places like Holland, on some of the most naturally blessed swampwon soil in the world fork-riced-ache!!! ------ (all too literally too) cutthroat world. Consider these circumscryptic arguments aimed at previving digital dutch decency with a difference. ------------ The transacting that was truly common during 'our' socalled 'golden age' now calls for ethically prudent pruning of archaic*(?)* weaponry production driven success to be thrown in for good, truly sharable and thus o so timely measure. --------- Back then a 1000 currencies circulated, a decidedly unspecialized and dilute form of stock exchange and voting rights exercise in one, enDOWing trade with the added advantage of preempting the all too infectious herdhype, conspirationally exclusive and manipulatory remnant of all thing raidlike which (due to the then [[as now]] as yet unpurged colonial component) bore the spores of its (meanwhile psychotically [[and again literally]] split) descendants, to wit: politics and media. The kind of concommitant clean trouble (allocalluviality - high quality [[fresh]] mud) free*(ing)* success I've kept on harping about digitally for 7 years now is the preliminary and prerequisite (workforce absorbing and vital industry = DustInTree) that will allow one to make entering the beknighted realm of universal validity and proverbial repute as simple as pressing 'enter' once underway.

------------ RECAP: money was once (already) a medium uniting politics and media; however, it lacked a biospherically common current aspect; then, to make matters worse and maters mad (moo!!), monopoly won out and we are left with (special interest) manipulated media and politics.

------------ Modestified desire dictates:

1 - Proper scale and freedom weighting (locale is where all the action is, leaving none for collections of them and/or those trying to interpret them and/or speak in their name 'at the top', truly a crown held stable and fed by a root).

2 - Partial overlap and patchquilt checks and balances add up to multiple almost but not quite duplicates that allow localization, disallow traceless corruption and thus will slow casino capitalism down which is good.

------------ Just as biospherical/solar revenues differ per region, even garden, so should a nonstandard multiple node systemic help checking at all stops and starts along the way; it is thus the bases that push and pull the more and more purely passive levels of open to scrutiny by read all but only third party non-manipulated ------ non-partitioned global and ocean like reserves. Transacters can withdraw (from it) upon mutual consent as a minimum and only as much as what their combined contributions plus whatever good will comes forth through smart publicity for timely thus appealing initiative amounts to. ------------ It strikes me that financial constructs are and were always already based on reputation (a fear and vengeance inspiring one anybody? Plantu, jokingly designed a thousander note together with the late Arafat; I have reproduced an impression of it and 'plantu(e)d' it at the top of my blog) - the trick is to determine ALL of its components (the contributing hypes hysterias, collective amnesias, cultural privilege and bias AS WELL AS the straightforwardly bulky, perhaps minute but at least tangible and thus harder to hide or falsify ones) and of course their constant flux and adjustments; it's a learning process (and a dizzying one given the on/off poleshifts by all psychological placetaking and making accounts). Central, we must not forget is a word we use for thoroughfares and rapids of things and beings there are a great many widely dispersed copies of. ------------ Christianity is decidedly split about choosing for it yet wanting to hold onto the safety and redundancy of local limits and variables that spell protection against some devilishly evil rivalling charismatics (and/or parasites, depending on day and age) that manage to impute being spokesperson, prophet (let alone last) or priest for the amassment, the ag- into congregation which they, at the same time, cause with their own global aspirations and pride in demographic success (monotheism's great big promoting yet selfdestruction devoice) no matter how politely they may begin such representation; they are doubling, bedeviling and attempting to generalize, uniformate and if (not immediately) possible (sooner or later) militarize (preferably treehoused and photosynthesis conscious) distributed constituents who only form a whole (as in the teeth and fists of time) symbolically but real alliances peacemeal, ... at least for a very long time to come . . . . cause the UN is pretty much a sham and ashambles at the mo wouldn't you agree?

: : : : : : : : Richard continues: Much better, both from the privacy and record integrity points of view, to share your records through a number of small systems withboth a human and historical reputation based on personal contact where you can automatically and cheaply request transaction and balance _summary_ information be disclosed to a potential trading partner. Yes I know that these procedures are subject to thesame kind of infosec weaknesses - however in my understanding not to the same kind of extent. It's a bit like the difference between falling over on ice in the street, and falling over on ice at the top of a cliff. The risk might be the same or similar, but the consequences when something goes wrong are not directly comparable. With your records split over a number of small and independent community-based systems if one enquiry mechanism is compromised this will have no impact on the others. If you don't like the idea that such systems involve authority based on reputation, better to have mutual and community-based non profits running these shows based on published LETSystem management principles, than other forms of management structure. A 2 stage reputation system, where the quality of the reputation information is partly based on the reputation of the independent reputation information providers, is inherently more secure and gives much better privacy to the trader than the single level system Todd proposes. Regards, Richard.

Let's fight rocks, they don't fight, we can't lose and they don't either cause they don't ever even begin to fight back.

Now to nevertheless give 'm (rocks) the random chance at scoring (and us an ethic of fair fighting) we could get a quite challenging gauntlet competition with BIG prize money for the survivors.

I admit this is more challenging (not to mention costly) than drawing a comic with animated and purchaseable personifications but plastic ('action' [[robot pre]]figures) and pulp are not nearly ever in the same sense personalizable (I mean, as assimilable) as rocks, (unless you really wanna go golemmodifying on us, .. hey .. ..clay tablets were first medicine in this kind of sense, only _afterwards used to keep score* when storehouse[[and thus supply line rhizorouser and tension]]builder, wellpaid, rainbow shirt wearing, cerebropatristically disowned disowner, the elite 'joesieve' [[who had it so tough he though nothing of making things tougher on sleepy steady state peasant existence, was buried by brothers only to rise high and free]], arrived on the scene)_ best prefigured by good draughtsmen, my favorite is Maarten Toonder by the way.

> February 08, 2005| Belarusian Bird of a "year" --- Anatoli SMOLSKIY, "Byelorusskaya Delovaya Gazeta" (The Byelorussian business newspaper) Newspaper, No 1501 -----
> The ornithologists from the Netherlands specially visited the State National Park "Belovezhskaya Pushcha" few years ago to watch a rarest bird, the largest owl all over the world. This is Great Grey Owl. The ornithologists from the national nongovernmental organization "Belarus Birds' Life" has announced this species "a Bird of a year", among other 52 species listed in the Belarus Red Data Book. Biology, ecology and characteristic of the owl are further in the article.

I have known King Amdo from the posts he does on indymain's newswire, a place I have spent a LOT of time over the past few years (and have 40 80K files with excerpts to show for it; find 'indymediasamples', perhaps in combination with 'poetpiet' [[nom de plume]] through google) and am quite forgiving when it comes to allowing folks like him an outlet, a private website is perfect.

> It is ironic that the conservative thesis of Samuel Huntington finally found its most charismatic advocate in the most liberal nation in the world: A prolific author, as far back as 1997 he [Pim Fortuyn] had published Against Islamicization of our culture (reissued as The Islamicization of our culture: The centrality of Dutch identity in late 2001, following 9/11. . .), in which he portrayed Islam in onflict with modern values and norms. He argued that because Islam does not tolerate separation between state and religion, it comes into direct conflict with liberal values. Already in August 2001 he had gone on record saying that 'I am . . . in favour of a cold war with Islam. I see Islam as an extraordinary threat, as a hostile society.' He liked to call himself 'the Samuel Huntington of Dutch politics' because he endorsed Huntington's The clash of civilizations (1998). . . . ------------ [I]n an interview in the Volkskrant of 9 February 2002, he declared that there was no room for immigrants and asylum seekers in the Netherlands,

By 1955, the Hoxsey clinic in Dallas was the largest privately owned cancer-treatment facility in the world with over 12,000 patients. However, Harry Hoxsey was constantly being arrested for practicing medicine without a license, and the AMA fought to close him down. In 1960, his clinics were officially banned in the US. ------------ Interestingly enough, one of the board members of the AMA who fought to close him down, ended up a patient at one of Hoxsey's clinics while Hoxsey was sitting in a jail cell.

> From the book Medicine: What Works & What Doesn't: . . . a 1953 federal report to Congress confirmed Hoxsey's charges of a "conspiracy" by the AMA, the NCI, and the FDA to "suppress" an impartial assessment of his methods. The AMA later admitted that Hoxsey's external medication had merit. Medical historian Patricia Ward recently found that six of the nine Hoxsey herbs demonstrated either anti-tumor or immune enhancing activity. Today, Hoxsey's chief nurse works at the Bio-Medical Center in Tijuana, Mexico (see Cancer Centers). The best responders are lymphoma, melanoma, and skin cancers.

THE HYPERSTITION CREW on dusts

> : : : : : : : : "Dust can contain up to 11,583,800,000 bacteria in each ounce. Spore autonomously engineers its customized mode of exhumation or 'defiling resurrection' in the form of an exo-rupture (the awakening ritual of the bacterial relic, the release of Anonymous-until-Now) in response to xenochemical hygiene and immaculately normal climate of the outside which give the process of awakening a sinister epidemiostrategic slant toward pinpointing (as well as sabotaging) normality and hygiene. If any function of the warmachines in WoTerror is especially involved with rudimentary sporulation dynamics of dust, it is because they pass through dense dusty clusters of the Mistmare or the Fog-of-War. Above all, warmachines thirst to be instantly suffocated by the hyperstitional pollution of dust-clouds ... that is to say, to be extinguished by WAR itself. Irreversible degenerating processes, contagious collectivity and auto-populating epidemics have made dustism one of the most inspiring instances of infernomatics for the Cosmodromic Capitalism. Dust (= 100) is the engineer of wasteland, but in the term of techno-capitalism it engineers the Westland. Dustism is the dominant path of Tellurian Insurgency."

I find her remarks quite incisive especially when they are applied to the role of muslim women in WoT. She discusses how women in middle eastern Islamic cultures (and particularly in desert nomadology) silently 'undermine' the role of men, pushing them to the point of utter passivity which registers itself as an aggressive but wasted phalomaniac defense mechanism (instead of preserving masculinity it turns to be autophagic). Mecca-nomistic agencies of WoT crave for desert as 'the grund independent of Earth' (Nothing but the grund!) or the post-atomic monopoly of 'God', but what they actually get is the Tellurian insurgency of the Unground: reaching immanence with the molten Core and the Sun (the tide for extinction).

------ (northanger posts on the Moore, Kurzweil, the wall/singularity/dark pastblastingly bright future) --- I disqualify all this grandiloquizing of techeads on the basis of their vehemently denied and for that all the more blatantly obvious inflammatory impatience for omnipotence; their transparantly feverish dreams of power don't get an ounce of appropriate powder placed correctly yet they have to use the rhetoric that doubles and disguises correct (core) action to describe the benefits of the other side, past and into the transformative dark, never letting on the barrier is physical radial and decidedly distributed; spots where concentrations occur are heavily militarized, metered etcetera but that does not and will never be able to negate l. . .eh .. ..nuptionotionalism as follows: DISPURSE, DISBURSE BLAST SMASH CLASH BASH SCATTER DISSIPATE - CONTACT SURFACE PLEXPLOSION OF CRUSHED ROCK DEEPENS SOIL, TERRESTRIAL SPRING LOAD STORE FOR RUSH OF LIFE'S LONGER CYCLES - INNUMERABLY PRINCIPLED PIET PROTOCALLERS KNOCK ON HEAVEN'S FLOOR, OFF THE LID N OPE THE DOOR SO CONTENT CAN BE LIT UP AND LIT OUT ----- northanger quoted:

> "Life moves quickly here. Ten metric years of slow time are like ten thousand years in the lower fast zone."

------- here again the opposite is true, people become less shamefaced about burning up the past and to compensate pretend they are heaving heaps of future into the present ----- this language purports to legitimize but perverts X since it lends but alienates, it severs and abducts general principle, it tries to stage a model, extrapolate from a truth and do concentrated versions of the good stuff (never looking back) and putting their loot and very being to detrimental and counterproductive use (usury) for the very source they play surrogate/sighpost flagship (flogshop) and pointer to. When and as long as 'progressive' spirit dictates reality, rather than being unable to carry concepts of the future to term, we lose our past and the very ground (dare I mention ancestral ties?) that supports us at dizzying blurspeed (though the results, are of course the same) .. which the likes of sd (labouring under the illusion my kind burdens, and the sooner left behind them the better) deny and will not accept. Something wonderful submitted to imperial display, refined to a formula fakery, a weaponsystem development with all the side benefits of awe struck crowd drawing spectacle. And it was ever thus. The solution is pretty simple: wage war with sperm, shoot whomever you like with it (be prepared to get close enough to the prettiest and most evocative of dickteazers to make the simulation a success but not close enough to get personal). Strangers in Our Homes: TV and Our Children's Minds
barefootdoctor.org/children's%20minds.htm
Before watching TV, he would be outside in nature, content to look at bugs, make things with sticks and rocks, and play in the water and sand. He seemed at peace with himself, his body, and his environment. When watching TV, he was so unresponsive to me and to what was happening around him, that he seemed glued to the television set. When I turned off the TV he became anxious, nervous, and irritable and usually cried (or screamed) for the TV to be turned back on. His play was erratic, his movements impulsive and uncoordinated. His play lacked his own imaginative input. Instead of creating his own play themes, he was simply re-enacting what he had just seen on TV in a very repetitive, uncreative and stilted way.

Just a side note it is not just TV that has caused the dysfunctionality there are many many other factors such as the alienation in a mass society and the alienation do to a sense of hopelessness and just being a cog within the machine (I strongly suggest reading Marx's Alienation Theory and apply it to a nation wide election where people honestly feel that their vote does not count in sea of voters and where they feel no connection to the outcome of the vote.... this is actually crucial in understanding the apathy in the American and European political systems... smaller regional or local elections where the electorate literally sees her/his vote counting is really the only way a healthy democracy can work and ideally that must be transparent and a dialogue not just a choice.. cencensus democracy).

Spheres of Action: Art and Politics - Boris Groys, Peter Sloterdijk and Peter Weibel ---- Saturday 10 December 2005, 10.00–17.30 © ONUK Karlsruhe
The philosophy of art in Germany has exerted increasing influence on art theory in Britain since the 1990s. Three outstanding and controversial German thinkers debate the changing relationship between art and politics: Peter Sloterdijk, Professor of Philosophy and Rector of the School of Fine Arts, Karlsruhe, and author of Critique of Cynical Reason (Edition Suhrkamp, 1983), Rules for the People Park (Suhrkamp Verlag KG, 1999) and Spheres (Suhrkamp Verlag, 1998); Peter Weibel, Director of the Center for Art and Media, Karlsruhe, and author of Fast Forward: Media Art (Ingvild Goetz, 2004) and The Open Work, 1964–1979 (Hatje Cantz, 2005); and Boris Groys, Professor at the School of Fine Arts, Karlsruhe and author of Stalin’s Total Work of Art (Hanser, 1988) and Ilya Kabakov (Phaidon Press, 1998).

The conference is chaired by Eric Alliez, Senior Research Fellow at University of Paris IV, and Peter Osborne, Professor of Modern European Philosophy at Middlesex University.

A minister called Nawijn who sailed into a gov seat on the wind of the dutch martyrvote (for Pim Fortuyn's posthumous party) is as good as ostracized now, specially since he started a thinktank in Pim's old Rotterdam home with Flip the Block bloke (the latter did appear once on dutch tv in a black sheep program, him against a host with the program hostess trying to be neutral).

The right has lost touch with their green roots as much as zionism has with theirs.

Another fella was ousted from Rotterdam city council after stigmatizing the religion predominant amongst migrants. Nobody is tackling the economic precipitates of monotheisms various gearshifts and surges.

Last week i listened to an interesting audio interview on cultureshocks (dot org?) with Dalrymple about prisons as fundamentalization aids. Secular criminals wander up the road to roots revival.

Who are the Faceless Cowards at USCIS?
Matthew McDaniel 28 Dec 2005 16:12 GMT

USCIS tags indigenous Akha womans Spousal Visa for "Security Reasons". We'd like to know who the Cowards are at USCIS? After getting deported by the US from Thailand, the family getting left behind, small children and their mother left to fend for themselves, we wonder who these faceless Nazis are?

Deported for Human Rights Activism. Deported because SOMETHING we were doing for the Akha hill tribe was SO important and upsetting the US Gov SO bad that they had to tell the Thai government what to do.

Then as if that wasn't good enough, they took 9 months and thousands of our dollars to issue the children passports. God forbid children should go to the US.

Then these frightened Cowards at USCIS and the US State Department had to be so concerned about one Akha woman and her four kids making it to the US that they tagged her visa application and it was held up for "Security Reasons".

This is the woman who is a "SECURITY RISK" to the US.

Do you know Thomas McGrath? Maybe the second or third best commie poet in English, counting Blake and Shelley as commies. His Letters To An Imaginary Friend is a long series of meditations on radicalism in America, but it is not preachy or didactic. He also wrote a wonderful novel, Coffin With No Handles, about labor organizing on the waterfront.

you hate governments do ya?? mmm, . . . that might be cause they (gvts) sold out (as opposed to sticking with prussian virtues free.de/geld and Knapp)to quick buck bizz and lost their feminine distinctions, common service and nurture oriented money, govt money, literally different and strong enough to weigh up to the scrupleless hi-risk kind that has taken over and sails under cover of being good enough to pay taxes with. . ... However, Stephen Schwartz was anti-Serb, whilst the alleged British Neo Cons appear to have been pro-Serb? Is this why Foundation for Defense of Democracies jettisoned Stephen in August 2003 over this Serb issue? Of course, Steve was seeing Serb agents under his bed. Little did he realize they were actually under his sheet in bed with him? ;-) Note that the Neo Cons are described as a "bizarre cult" of crypto-commies who hoodwinked naive conservatives like Margaret Thatcher and

Reagan's inner

Adventures in American Theocracy
(Part 1) The Pequot War -- by Mark W. Bradley

On Fri, 31 Dec 2004, Jared Diamond was cited:
> Jared Diamond who has dedicated much of his work to studying how societies tend to follow their established patterns of behavior right to the bitter end - edge.org/3rd_culture/diamond03/diamond_index.html

I don't know about other people, but I found this analysis maddeningly dilatory and confused. Diamond starts by saying he wants to study how societies destroy themselves. But he spends most of his time studying problems that didn't destroy societies. And in the end, he misses the forest for the trees.What his few societies that self destructed had in common was that they were isolated and stuck in place -- island societies. The innumerable other societies that didn't self-destruct weren't necessarily any smarter -- they just didn't run out of resources. In part because they had room to run. Given this, there's a simple answer to the answer of why these few societies self-destructed. And it's not an obscure answer. It was the founding argument of modern ecology, namely the collective action problem, originally termed "the tragedy of the commons." In a situation of finite resources, short term, rational action will always lead to long-term collectively irrational results unless an overarching institution is created that changes the short term calculus. Diamond treats this in passing as if it were the exception rather than the rule. If you reverse that perspective, the whole puzzle he is trying to solve vanishes and is replaced by its opposite. Without a solution to the collective action problem, all societies will destroy themselves if they are faced with finite necessary resources.So it's not a puzzle why they were destroyed. It's a puzzle how their destruction could have been stopped. And it's a puzzle he doesn't address. Which is kind of frustrating consider how long he goes on.In our present situation, where society is global society and we're stuck on a rock in space, we can be fairly said to be in the situation of the Easter Islanders. And we have the same problem they (most likely) had: no central authority, but rather a competition among subgroups. It's not realizing the problem that's the nub. It's creating an authority that could solve it -- a place where effectively binding collective decisions could be made for the globe as a whole. It's a political problem, not a scientific problem. And one that he doesn't address. All the knowledge problems he discusses are interesting but secondary. They could all be solved and we could still perish. And global warming, which I perceive as the constant background to this entire essay, is so far is furnishing a perfect example of how that could concievably happen -- of how you could solve all the knowledge problems he spends his time with and still be stuck at square one and a half. So if that was his target, IMHO he missed it entirely. -------- Michael http://mailman.lbo-talk.org/..20041227/029757.html jks dismisses hardin, Michael agrees but cites Mancur Olson's reformulation of the collective action problem (cited by 707 other books by amazon's count; Logic of Collective Action: Public Goods and the Theory of Groups) having "huge impact and is now a completely accepted part of the common wisdom of economics, political science, public policy, etc."

---- "Except by Olsen's logic, the Civil Rights movement shouldn't have happened, as has been pointed out by an author whose name escapes me at the moment. Even Russell Hardin is letting go of the neoclassical econ./rat. choice approach to collective action, that shows how deep the backlash has become over the past decade or so." ------ Ian

> The man who killed a Police Officer in Red Bluff, CA claims immunity because he was incorporated.
> Hello Everyone, my name's Andy. I killed a Police Officer in Red Bluff, California in a motion to bring attention to, and halt, the police-state tactics that have come to be used throughout our country.
> Now I'm coming forward, to explain that this killing was also an action against corporate irresponsibility.
> All of the major problems in America and throughout the world today are caused by corporate irresponsibility.
> The very concept behind corporations is to protect their owners from taking responsibility for their actions. This means that directors within corporations can dump waste chemicals in our drinking water, or keep our work environments in fatally dangerous conditions without any personal liability. Corporations murder thousands of people each year this way and are never held accountable.
> As a statement against this practice, prior to my action in Red Bluff, I formed a corporation under the name "Proud and Insolent Youth Incorporated," so that I could use the destructive immunity of corporations and turn it on something that actually should be destroyed.
> The name 'Proud and Insolent Youth' is a reference to Peter Pan. Just before their final dual and Captain Hook's demise, Hook said to Peter, "Proud and insolent youth, prepare to meet thy doom." To which Peter replied, "Dark and sinister man, have at thee!" Now, Peter Pan hates pirates, and I hate pirates, and corporations are nothing but a bunch of pirates. It's time to send them to a watery grave, and rip them completely out of our lives. "

Certainly no one in print possesses more powerful suction than City Journal Editor Myron Magnet, who sports 19th-century muttonchop whiskers and a 21st-century weight problem. I saw him on the street in Manhattan once, and he looked even more preposterous than he does in the photo at this link: manhattan-institute.org/html/magnet.htm

> As that site notes, Magnet's "book, The Dream and the Nightmare: The Sixties' Legacy to the Underclass (Encounter Books, 1993) argues that the radical transformation of American culture that took place in the 1960s brought the underclass into being.... President-elect George W. Bush told the Wall Street Journal that it was the most important book he'd ever read after the Bible ...."

> This is a quote that summarizes the choices before us (from, Somers, Robert, The Scotch Banks and System of Issue. Edinburgh: Adam and Charles Black, 1873): "The question betwixt a central and a plural issue is in reality a question whether banking is to be confined to the great capitalists, or to a few of the greatest towns, and to the high commerce of nations, or opened up to all classes of people and made to embrace the industry, savings and interests of the many. The tendency of a State or central form of issue is to aristocratize banking. The effect of a plural issue is to popularize this powerful lever both of moral and material improvement. The one seems, therefore, as comfortable as the other is counter to the social tendencies of the age, and to that ever-advancing impulse to raise, enrich, refine and brighten the whole body of a people, which is the crowning glory of all civilization." -- Tom Greco

> On Sun, 16 Jan 2005 10:51:53 -0600, Chuck0 <chuck at mutualaid.org> wrote: Michael: Could you explain to us why you forwarded this essay to this list? You have this habit of forwarding materials to lists. Posting an essay is not dialogue. Why exactly did you feel compelled to share this article? Chuck ----- I know very little about contemporary anarchist groups and ideological tendencies, in contrast to the 57 varieties of Trotskyism, Maoism and Stalinism, which are found on the list (leftist_trainspotters at yahoogroups.com) from which I cut and pasted that piece. As could be expected, the M-L who posted it there had the usual orthodox marxist dismissal of anarchists and anarchism(s).-- Michael Pugliese > rise wrote: Usually I would balk at the idea of writing a lengthy and detauiled critique of something put out by AnarchyMag or any of its associates, but I felt like making an exception on this list. These people have largely been discredited and refuse to reply to the extensive and comprehensive rebuttals of their ridiculous positions and political lines, which have little to do with anarchism as a living and historical revolutionary tradition, and more to do with their individual lifestyle choices and liberal conceptions of the political process.

> This is incredibly funny. Rise is a marginal wingnut who nobody takes seriously. It's really sad when young ideologues such as Rise make a complete ass of themselves for several years and then they mature and realize that the world doesn't conform to the black and white world that they've believed in. The anarchist movement includes many people with different points of view, interests, desires, motivations and priorities. Rise would have people believe that there is one true form of anarchism, which pretty much goes against the anti-ideological stance of anarchism. Next thing we'll hear from Rise is something about Anarchy magazine being an arm of the U.S. State Department. -- Chuck ChuckO here is up to his old 'diversity of tactics' tricks too though .. . .that reminds me of the way I view holy books and the inevitable schisms and flavors in faith arising from them (the latter happens cause wether believers take pride in the amalgam or the 'of one pieceness' these tomes usually contain a little something for everyone, peaceful and violent alike). I question condoning this diversity and allowing folks with very different (and only reconcilably diverse if your aim is chaos and breakdown) inclinations to get on their hobby horses unrestrictedly. Just as the stars balance each other, canceling all too radical movement through a check and counterweight dynamic, certain human natures can have quite neutralizing, at times even annihilatory effects on others (cowboys and indians anybody?). To become better than human history has shown us to be thus far one needs to be both beyond and below (covering preliminary, preparatory, preceding time and territory).

That this was so in America is as sad as the fact that Bernard-Henri Lévy is widely regarded as France's foremost contemporary philosopher. But "BHL" is Sontag's twin brother in almost every field imaginable: a media personality, an "intellectual," a hater of Western civilization, a Christophobe, an "essayist," an enthusiastic promoter of homosexuality, an admirer of Sartre, an outspoken advocate of the Muslim side in the Bosnian war and in Kosovo. In Sontag's and Levy's lunatic account of world affairs the Christians are always at fault and their enemies are always innocent of any wrongdoing. For both of them the "siege" of Sarajevo became a stage for countless self-serving media appearances, as well as the symbol of their decisive move beyond truth and reality and beyond the limits of the aesthetic.

25 januari 2005 Ayaan, check these crux of culture clashes quotes! ------ http://originsofautism.com/ by Andrew Lehman

> ------ Revered features of the ideal male in a matrifocal society are disparaged by patriarchy. But it is these features, and the characteristics of the individuals that thrive in that kind of world, that is the world of the autistic child. ------ Without constant exposure to the primary features of the matrifocal world, the neurological structure of a child organized physically, mentally, and emotionally to experience the world in that way will languish. Unceasing interactional music with highly evolved rhythms and constant touch with sophisticated dance are essential to a child inclined toward maturational delay. A diet familiar to the physiology of tens of thousands of years ago is appropriate for the facile functioning of that physical system. Their brains crave highly sophisticated pattern in sound and physical space. Their bodies crave protein, vegetables, fruits, nuts, natural oils, roots. How sad and ironic, that a brain created to perceive and appreciate subtle nuances in relationship in space and time, understimulated by a society relatively devoid of song and dance, and a diet characterized by wheat, dairy and other unfamiliar substances, ends up in relationship with itself only, unable to cross bridges to other human beings. ------ Incidentally, matrifocal social structure females have relatively high testosterone levels (remember, they are more domineering) and so they produce maturationally delayed males and maturationally accelerated females. In a patrifocal social structure the females have lower testosterone levels producing maturationally accelerated males, and delayed females. ------ The timing of the onset of puberty also has dramatic affects upon the ability of autistic children to join the world as we know it. Diet, percentage of body fat, food additives and physical activity are primary variables responsible for pubertal timing. There has been a drop in the age of puberty by three to four years over the last 100 years in urban cultures worldwide caused primarily by changes in diet. These dietary changes signal our bodies that increased fat, carbohydrate, and protein resources are available to sustain an increase in birth rate, accomplished by lowering the age of procreation; a naturally selected response. The fact that puberty comes several years sooner than would have occurred in the matriarchal society from which the autistic child has been severed from reduces childhood by several years giving the autistic child far less time for the brain to grow and develop. When puberty hits brain growth stops. The testosterone surges at early puberty in both sexes halts cerebral development. For the autistic child, this leaves no more time to catch up. Slower maturation plus early puberty in a world with inappropriate environmental stimulus combine to deeply inhibit these children of artistic cultures from entering the modern world. Proper diet will delay puberty and give the autistic child's brain more time to mature. ------ We hypothesize that responsibility for many autistic syndrome complications over and above expected developmental delays lies with the absence of constant touch, interactive music, rhythm and dance as infants, stimulus required for full functioning in a genotype as told as autism represents, coupled with a deeply inappropriate diet. Phonetic dyslexics; stutterers; many Tourette's sufferers; many homosexuals and lesbians; many gifted athletes, mathematicians, artists, musicians, and composers; many schizophrenics; specific alcoholic types and many obese women are left spectrum, old genotype individuals who can be located along the left end of the maturational arc. We believe that the human species moves through time inside a maturational arc, its character determined by the effects of sexual selection and Lamarckian selection on the rate and timing of maturation, creating the vast skill and talent spread of contemporary culture. ------ The United States is the melting pot. A glorious result of this stew is the blending of formerly unfamiliar genetics into new genetic mixes engendering skills and talents among our children often unattained by a homogeneous people who rarely mix. Usually, these stunning talents are derived from individuals located along the left end of the maturational spectrum. Grace-filled coordination, musical excellence, and intuition for abstract pattern manipulation, and extraordinary dance skills are some of the many gifts associated with the left side. And it is no mistake that many of these people are Americans - mixed ethnic Americans. In America the races blend. ----- Darwin placed a very heavy emphasis on his theory of Natural selection. Primary supportive arguments were derived from his experience as a breeder of pigeons. He noted a specific repeating event that occurred among pigeons and other species that he observed. The progeny of two members of the same species that had been breeding along divergent lines often exhibited features of their last common genetic forbear. Pigeons with no common ancestors for 2000 years, breeding along separate lines in China and West, had chicks exhibiting the wing coloration and patterns of roc pigeons, characteristics that had not appeared in either line for hundreds of years. ------ As barriers keep falling that prevent peoples from different ethnic background from marrying, the children of those marriages often exhibit features of the parents' last common ancestor. The diaspora from Africa has been estimated to have begun to occur around 50,000 years ago. Marriages of two individuals from ethnic backgrounds last in contact by a portion of that length of time will frequently have children requiring the stimulation and diet common in a matriarchal social structure from that far back in time. These are children blessed with the potential to make the modern world a far richer place to live, but they require special nurturing and a special diet. ------ your editor: With all the bad blood in Holland between folks on the right (demonized) and left (busy with gratuitous removal of stigmas, that is, without requiring a change in habits' and/or level of understanding'that causes them - whichever comes first / easiest) I suggest the road means and method this line of work goes along and works with (largest possible scope span and frame of reference to anchor and embed into clear, obvious, logical and to a large extent verifiable weave of time and space) will be the most innocuous, least resistance provoking, bycause most universal, diagnosis of our cultural predicaments. ------ --

The Riverend is dead. I mourn this loss. ------ the first part of a 43K essay: Foriver For Allof -- The Ravisht Timing A'Bride by the Riverend Clarence R Sterling -- © 2001 ------ Dates in Finnegans Wake (pages 013-014) re/ the mainstream's confluency with an ecclesiastical sidedrain -- ------ Part the First ------ ". . . time . . . is the ghost of space . . ." Henri Bergson. (i) James Joyce was time-obsessed. He approached his birthdays as though they were holy shrines. He placed the fifteen stories forming Dubliners in an ordination which mimics the grand stages of an individual's passage through time, through childhood, that is, and on through adolescence, maturity, and public life until, in the last story, we pass through a doorway into the land of the dancing dead. It is the same doorway a young boy stares at in fear on the first pages of the first story. Throughout Dubliners, even though the names and faces change in each tale, we have a clear sense that a meter is running in the background. ------ Portrait of the Artist As A Young Man begins "Once upon a time and a very good time it was . . ." A story begins with the telling of another story, and it gives you the sense of some time kicking into being. By the final leaf of Portrait, the reality of experience is on its way for the "millionth time," and the boy is grown. ------ Ulysses is about a specific day which, like all days, must for the duration of its brief candle carry whatever residue of the past will exist as the future. By the end of the first paragraph of Ulysses, we know what time of that day it is. It is a few hours after daybreak, signaled by the mild morning air. ------ Finnegans Wake on page three brings us back around to when some things that happened a long time ago have not happened again . . . yet. Is there any real time at all in the Wake? Maybe. ------ Time in the modern world has devolved into measurement, to accounts of pure quanta. Such time is easily recorded in ways which preclude any possibility of one time's being mistaken for another. If such standard time appears in the Wake, then a given time could be a Friday or a Sunday, for example, but never both. This does not sound like something we are likely to find in Finnegans Wake, and generally we don't, neither by implication, nor by the author's stating the time in any form of chronological notation. Actual instances of recordable time are almost non-existent in the Wake, and there is only one true date of record in the entire book: "31 Jan. 1132 A.D." on page 420 line 20. ------ Other years, days, times of day, aeons, yugas, and bank holidays may be sensed through a grey mist in the Wake. They will range from obvious intentions of the author to hallucinatory eisegetics of the fifth kind, which are probably also the author's intent, but only once do we really know exactly where we are on the timeline of history. The last day of the first month of 1132. ------ Joycean studies have failed to come up with even a clue as to why this date is in the Wake. You will have no trouble at all understanding or believing the significance of my thesis, but generally perceptive English teachers have contributed so much of great value to Joycean studies that it is often difficult for them to accept having missed something so essential. ------ To discover what Joyce had in mind with 1132, one must scramble up the slippery slopes of calendrics, wrestle with the smooth and smoky convolutions of Ecclesiastical Computation, and take the requisite 20+ years to internally incorporate the philosophical axioms of Sephardic Qabalism in order to make sure they don't apply. You must embrace hagiography with the open-hearted spirit of a novitiate, yet listen to fairy tales with the seriousness of a saint. After all this comes Irish history, which is where the dragon's casque really lies. ------ All the times a reasonable person spends gathering degrees, playing at sports, constructing a career, enjoying the company of others . . . I wasted all those opportunities trying to discover what 31 Jan. 1132 A.D. means. You, on the other hand, need only be someone whose intelligence is ready to play. 1132 A.D. first appears in the Wake at 013.33. The Sepher Yetzirah identifies 32 as the number of strands from which all the universe is woven. 32 and 11 are prominent in Ulysses. One should not, however, overly confuse the many identities of 11 and 32 with the year named 1132. The author emphasizes this in attaching A.D. to the 1132's on pages 013 and 014. Anno Domini technically identifies a date as liturgical time. In Ireland in 1132, all time was liturgical time.

Right Wing Fascist Hackers Target IMCs
posted by Radhippie, Jane_Doe - Friday January 21, 2005
And so it begins. A group of American right wing cyberterrorists are targeting nodes on the Indymedia network. Victoria IMC was one of their first victims. Victoria got off easy compared to hack attacks on Vermont, New Hampshire, and Oklahoma this week. The hacking was claimed by a self-described "fascist right wing hacker" on the web site KobeHQ. Others at Kobe claimed to have recently brought down other IMCs. The group is running a website called Indy-media.org with the same software as Oklahoma. A story that ran in the Oklahoma City IMC stated:

OKLAHOMA CITY - A right-wing hacker group has claimed credit for wiping "Oklahoma IMC right off the face of the internet."

To underline my remarks, just visit the web site infinite-energy.com. In my most recent book Re-Inheriting the Earth, the index shows more pages of citation to Mallove's work (nine) than that of any other individual. He was very grounded and did not venture into consciousness science as I had done. This made him all the more credible. He never succumbed to the pseudo-scientific claims of New Age pundits and acted as a responsible scientist throughout. He didn't play favorites but looked at all viable alternatives with intellectual honesty.

Joanna did organize a "tea" -- complete with cucumber sandwiches, sherry, a fabulous chocolate cake, a clean house, and gorgeous flowers. About seven people said they'd come and exactly one person showed up, Chuck Grimes. Oh, and everybody cancelled at the last minute.That was not fun. Great inducements will be necessary for Joanna to ever do this again. ------ Joanna

> "Burke ever held, and held rightly, that it can seldom be right to "sacrifice a present benefit for a doubtful advantage in the future". It is not wise to look too far ahead; our powers of prediction are slight, our command over results infinitesimal. It is therefore the happiness of our own contemporaries that is our main concern; we should be very chary of sacrificing large numbers of people for the sake of a contingent end, however advantageous that may appear
>> "We can never know enough to make the chance worth taking. There is this further consideration that is often in need of emphasis: it is not sufficient that the state of affairs which we seek to promote should be better than the state of affairs which preceded it; it must be sufficiently better to make up for the evils of the transition" --John Maynard Keynes ------- j-bradford-delong.net that totally ruins any respect I might have had due to his for Gesell and the quotes Ted dishes up; this is pure, plain and simple sabotage regarding one of my most cherished dreams: trees; gigantic, well cared for, properly spaced and kept in shape well past maturity

http://vv.arts.ucla.edu/publications/thesis/official/structure.htm A freefloater, I can't discover any pages related to this one, it begins, nevertheless, thus:
Structure

> As mentioned, the structure of the piece was loosely based on the Hindu chakra system, with seven layers that were designed to be viewed in a vertical fashion, from top to bottom. Each of the shapes that were representing a part of the energetic body were designed by me and programmed by Gerald using the fluidiom "assembler," the language he created for choreographing the dynamic construction (growth/unfolding) process.
> Each one of the abstracted shapes / structures representing the body is linked with strands suggestive of the DNA helix, playing on the desire to "descend" into the body and discover and mine for deeper levels of information. Levels are seen one at the time, starting from the top, each one programmed to be viewed for a specific amount of time before the next one is exposed. As one "descends" from one layer to the next, there is less and less time and more and more information. The entire sequence lasts 333 seconds, with all navigation connected to sound. --- ah, wait, it's a fluidiom related piece. I am among even more friends here than initially anticipated (via a google's in the eighties page) ---- Find an exquisite piece of prose on fluidiom (has replaced all the fancy java stuff; I bet his bandwidth bills were fat). > Jewel of the black night, the light of our eyes.

> Brighter than starlight, whiter than snow,
> Look down on us in the darkness below.

> If well you should find us, then well let us stay,

> Be it seven times better when we greet the dawn,
> So light up our way and keep us from all harm.
>
> Give strength to the weary. Give alms to the poor.
> To the tainted and needy five senses restore.

Give song to our voices. Give sight to our eyes,
To see the sun bow as the new moon shall rise.

Cast your eyes downward to our dwelling place,
Three times for favor and three times for grace.
Over the dark clouds your face for to see,
To banish misfortune and keep trinity.

In the name of Our Lady, bright maiden of grace,
In the name of the King of the city of peace,
In the name of our Savior, who hung on the tree,
All praise to the moon, for eternity.

ttp://newswire.indymedia.org/nl/newswire/2005/03/820420.shtml - Historic public meeting: The creation of a nationwide, non-corporate alternative currency. ------ A Better World Is Within Reach - Peace Network ----------- I have not read the links provided in the above article . 03.Mar.2005 03:28 .. . .But I am willing to learn more. Why a peace dollar? Why not simple mint GOLD!? --------- could be useful as a transition ------- Everyone knows that there is only a limited amount of GOLD on earth, so this would make a perfect currency which would not be vulnerable to all the things that fiat-paper currencies are vulnerable to. And in fairness to all peoples and traditions of the world, let's just call it by it's noble name: gold currency.

---- not only is gold limited but its supply steadily increases, nicely keeping pace with those who think they need to have descendants with more money, but there is an even greater danger/deception involved in calling gold 'noble'. Think of the unecological ways used to produce it. However, your first point is valid and in times when the confidence of people around the world in their democracy is low (corresponding to the situation that has all the gold safely and unquestioningly out of their reach) Mao's least macho trick might be in order again, he gained people's confidence in one fell swoop by the simple act of cutting up and doling out the gold reserve to the people equitably as soon as he gained hold of it; gold reserves are a symptom of hi confidence, effective regulations, the ones that people can honour without any heartwrench ---

> The name of the currency will be "gold" which is in english. This word "gold" can be translated into all foreign languages and can be called as such in the native lands. But then, which human-made laws will prevent some checks-and-balances so-to-speak, ie. HOARDING??? Well, Islam provides a complete economic framework for such a currency to work for all (non-Muslims and Muslims)! ---

Deb Frisch post on becker-posner-blog.com rationale for preventative war; her last lines:

> "The majority of the civilized world is very close to be justified to blow us up. Do you understand where this is going, doc? Moreover, the degree of certainty required before preventive actions are justified has been considerably reduced below what it was in the past because the destructive power of weaponry has enormously increased. Perhaps most worrisome, the power of weapons continues to grow, and to become more easily accessible. Critics of preventive wars and other preventive actions against rogue states and terrorist groups ignore these major changes in weaponry and their availability. Democratic governments have to recognize that they no longer have the luxury of waiting to respond

> I know Joseph Huber. He's a nice guy and very knowledgeable. He and James Robertson published a book a while back that describes a government approach to monetary reform titled New Money: A Monetary Reform for the Information Age.

While I have great respect for both Joseph and James, I can't see how such reform proposals have an ice cube's chance in hell of ever being implemented. The money power has completely taken over central governments and they've constructed the money system to be the way they want it. Further, there is the much more interesting possibility of liberating the exchange process through the voluntary, private approach of constructing networks for mutual credit-clearing.

In an era permeated by cynicism (Peter Sloterdijk has, in another context, talked about an "enlightened false consciousness" - autodidactproject -- .org/quote/cynicslo.html) Bush is unabashedly appealing to what seems like a philosophically incorrect and almost embarrasingly retro idealism to marshall against fanatical terrorists. And, complicating the sell and task, and unlike the struggle against communism under Reagan, terrorism is not considered as pressing a challenge as the Soviets were by many in large swaths of Europe, Latin America, and Asia.

Adherents to “non-violent” protest methods preach against targeting corporate property. We feel that giving private property a higher value than life is an uncritical acceptance of the dominant value system of American consumer society. As activists we feel that we need to debate these issues further amongst ourselves. The problem we are addressing immediately is that these “non-violent” activists used their numerical advantage to isolate and dominate practitioners of alternate protest philosophies: most visibly, the black block anarchists.

The conventional argument we are up against is that usury can't be outlawed because it is between consenting adults. But by ignoring the fact that debt progressively erodes the ability of the debtor to consent to financial imperatives, the usurer's argument should be treated with the same degree of contempt as we would treat the case of slaveowners who argued that owning slaves was a natural property right. Both the usurer's and the slaveowner's arguments subtly depends upon the same invalid assumption, that the humanity of the victim can be treated as being less valid than the humanity of the perpetrator of the economic injustice and crime which we are confronting. ---------- /2005/03/821411.shtml GENEVA (AP) Malnutrition among the youngest Iraqis has almost doubled since the U.S.-led invasion toppled Saddam Hussein, a hunger specialist told the U.N. human rights body Wednesday in a summary of previously reported studies on health in Iraq. By last fall, 7.7 percent of Iraqi children under 5 suffered acute malnutrition, compared to 4 percent after Saddam's ouster in April 2003, said Jean Ziegler, the U.N. > The IRS evaluates different kinds of local currency systems differently. There's more information on this topic in the Links section of this website, but essentially the IRS distinguishes for purposes of taxation between systems which are charitable and those which are simple exchange/bartering systems. Charitable local currency systems aren't taxed like exchange/barter systems. I guess the IRS figures that a dentist and a car mechanic exchanging services without using cash is still commerce, so it (the government) still deserves to tax the two transactions. But if the same dentist offers services for significantly less than market value, this is considered charity and falls into a different IRS category.

deceived by the light --- There are plenny expressions personifying light; dutch has 'm too; some turn obsessive and suspiciously monotonous biblical 'sense' (doctrine) of it (critiqued at url) around into one to be wary of by the simple act of emphasizing gradation (from 'lichtend voorbeeld' = exemplary .. huge step down from bloatedly homogenizing 'light of this world') to 'niet het helderste licht' = not the brightest light .. ..which brings us back around to Mr Bush the top legal criminal of this world.

that michael tsarion points to widely diverging scholarship; pithy piccie based stuff like jordanmaxwell.com/articles/symbols4.html on the one hand and on the other to, in comparison to his own, completely muddled and very verbose bible scholars (taylor) who pick and choose but ultimately don't manage to get beyond the delusion that there is a divinely inspired version of the bible(.ca), makes it all the more suprising he comes out with such succinctly stated but wide ranging pages such as this one: taroscopes.com/minorarcana.html very valuable interpretation tool.

funny .. one of the symbolpic pages references google hits for 'the most holy black cube' and 6th hit is a usnisa.org page (a very crazy one but most of them are so. . .) and when you search for this line as a phrase you find google hasn't closed the circle back to the file yet (due to the + signs between search terms I guess; the everlasting way to whack google, rite?)

anyways, on vnwo666.1colony.com/custom.html holy blasphemy - the page that tops the ranks I read this:

> "It may strike a Muslim aspirant a bit odd that the most holy shrine, the Grand Mosque at Mecca in the city of Medina is called the Masjid ul-Haram.
> The word "haram" is the opposite of halal which means lawful or permitted. The word "haram" has a connotation of sexual sin attached to it. A prostitute or an adulteress may be called a sharmouta or a bint l'haram (daughter of sin). .... .. Ideally the aspirants will complete seven revolutions, counter-clockwise around the Kaaba and and meet up with Al Hajarul Aswad, The Black Stone, which they are encouraged to kiss. The Black Stone is imbedded in the South East corner of the Kaaba, and it protrudes with a slight bulge from the black shroud which surrounds it. It is said to have fallen from heaven and according to Hadith (tradition) it was whiter than milk before it fell. It is a Hematite-coloured mound with a darker indentation, which resembles a female vagina. in fact, the stone is undeniably vulvic." --

-- the answer to this riddle is not blasphemy of the new but of the old conquered order, celebrating its capture and encapsulation; religion isn't so much preoccupied with reliques as it is with relinquishment, they extinguish and display token TROPHEES

ALTERNATIVE RENEWABLE ENERGY --- dutch wheel
Testing period

> In the coming six months the bus has to prove itself in everyday practice. Come summer, the city of > Apeldoorn is set to decide whether to use whisperers on a larger scale in public transport. Dr Arjan Heinen, inventor of the whisperer and director of E-traction, radiates confidence: "This is a practical solution for present-day public transport. Every bus driver can get behind the wheel and do his job as before, only now it's quiet, clean and energy-efficient." The future of the in-wheel electric engine seems bright. At the recent Tokyo Motor Show, it was the engine of choice in many of the futuristic hydrogen-powered concept cars.

Censorship of violent gaming --- I (as 19th commenter) go: Growing up I had my complaints about impediments to becoming a truely poised, connected, rooted, stable and productively responsible human being but growing up along a road where visiting the neigbours takes a jaunt down one path and up another (frequently enough there's also an at least half a minute long stretch of very farreaching vista offering road in between) lack of excercise wasn't one of them. Privilege? If you want to call going out into wind and rain for eggs and vegetables that OK, gaming is in my opinion an urban surrogate for fucked up demographics and the reactionary resentment driven down side of class division; growing up with something, anything, will make defending the ties with its past and pastimes almost reflexive but I urge you to reflect and my incentive is an agreement with your judgement at the outset, I am not a fan of censorship either .. ..but I would like to see one sided violence 'focused', as you say (I'd go for 'obsessed' meself), gaming out competed as soon as possible; nudged aside by the wild success of film that shows a succesful graduation away from 'pure' undiluted violence and slipaslides a wedge, a splicey slice worth of transition into this narrative; a way out, a true alternative, an attraction exerting activity, the type of strenuous exciting and in chain-of-being terms, lowliest possible subject tackling (begin at rockbottom since such material will never complain of being subjected ((dominated, yoked, coerced)) though you dishonour it maybe if you dump your load in dead as doornail type toxic rivers rather than distribute to actively set up and watched compost heaps); kinetic mastery that makes martial fighting attractive can be replaced with gauntlet and interesting ways to dynamicize and add elements of danger to the .. .eh . . . focus here: rock dust!!!!!!!! To make, distribute, moisten, weather and otherwise stimulate metabolization of it is also a if not the way to stop that other disastrously rampant surrogate: vitaminpills (yes datsrite, this is a conspiracy to annihilate that multibillion inDUSTry and end evil tasting supplements from hell; I want to welcome the intelligence and common sense back which understands that traces need be fed; herded if you like, back into our produce; hell, I'm out to game them back in there, though I realize gamers don't get hungry in the ways pysically more active folks do; in a real sense, gaming is a symptom/effect of the very lack I 'm fighting here). Long live the subjectivation that underlies and forms the base of all others up the chain of increased sentience, mobility and interconnection on micro and molecular levels, as I said yesterday: I'm fighting to regain interest in and awareness of the supreme topicality of all terraraising aeons: dusting the garden .. .. a fractionation trick that turns the fiction, an unbind bound to help (it) steer clear away from social friction and into supraspecial agreement; a closer meshmatch social faction action of peerless peerage.

About that exercise early in life: mine didn't turn out entirely happy either seeing that I wasn't allowed owner- nor at least directorship of even the tiniest corner of the garden and guerrilla actions were soon found out by surveillance; what's worse, I was forced to participate in and execute the to me distasteful and far from fukuokan / permacultural measures that are 'de riguer' for hobby gardeners in these parts (Holland). I thus experienced the earliest tastes of resentment at the hands of my own parents, who disciplined, expected and set me to weed and dig the garden; I recoiled at the worm slaughter, ugliness of denuded (to them 'clean') ground, etcetera and since the garden was big and their way of dealing with it a daily challenge, this 'blessing' turned into the bone of contention that soured our bonds and it was to do so till the end of their days; very late in life when my parents were to hold to do the upkeep in their wonted ways anymore I made offered them a last ditch chance to belatedly make up for their mistake and finally leave management of the garden to me in return for care; leaving that in the hands of their own estranged child turned out to be too much of a revolutionary spectre and so it came to be that not so many years later dad is dying in an Alzheimer patient outfit and mother lives in a new house with hardly any green in sight, the house I grew up in and which was invested with the most meticulous upkeep got sold and rudely remodeled. Life retains rough and rude edges no matter how sharp your slicer.

OK, here's the sandman story to keep the dreamswell up kids
I figure we could use a break and have some entertainment/comic relief with an upbeat/downbreath message:
Militancy or cleverness? Time to test the ways –
Submerge 3-4 or a lot more partly inflated, cappilarily connected beachballs vertically.
Could somebody plausibly yet going on merely analog experience inspired intuition predict what will happen before I go out and try it?
Will only the upper one fill fully, the deeper ones deflate somewhat and all end up with different air volumes?
That to me seems unlikely since the air pressure, as mobile and communicative as it is ought to distribute/equaliberate pretty quick over such short distances and attempt to 'homogenize'; all the lower ones will deflate in favor of the upper ones who are in the best position to relieve the pressure altogether .. . but if instead of allowing that pressure to escape we were to squeeze the air out it will attempt to flow into the next one down unless it is already full of course and go down the row to the nearest one that can accommodate the air; we see the balls rise but the airflow 'sink' (fall?). Depending on the amount of full balls we are able to entrain squeezing the upper one shut (which could then go down on the descending (ball) half of a circuit) in order to have enough empty fillable balls at the bottom to start the whole thing on a swirl, a roll a swill a swivel a sway and a swim till this huge bubble digesting snake springs a leak somewhere.

Is their a minimum amount of balls needed before the whole thing sets and gets in motion. ... Will nothing happen? .... Don't quote me. Do it. Anybody following Beckerath lines in accounting for it all has thereby earned my permission (and I am sure Wessel would agree unless someone is pulling a Schauberger dirty on him too).
Seems to me the air pressure, being an average of those at the different depths or the deepest point to which the air pressure penetrates (starts being able to opens balls) must certainly be great enough to have (topball) emptying power left after the loss inducing transferrals via the rails to the (upperball)shutting molds at the beginning of the downward trajectory set in motion.

"Secondary Currency in Circulation: An Empirical Analysis"
(Job Market Paper) (with David Blackburn)
Abstract: Many cases exist of multiple currency usage throughout history. As two leading examples, secondary currencies were widespread during both the Great Depression in the United States and the 2002 recession in Argentina. What are the determinants of multiple currency usage and what is the effect on economic activity? We address these issues here empirically, using individual-level surveys collected by the authors in Argentina during 2002 and 2003
The evidence supports the theoretically predicted determinants of secondary currency acceptability put forth in monetary theory. In particular we find that the acceptability of the secondary currency increases when the supply of national currency is low, the relative seigniorage of the secondary currency is low, and the individual trading technologies are less effective. Moreover we find that the acceptability of the secondary currency has real effects on economic activity. Among those who use the secondary currency the monthly gain is more than 15 percent of the average Argentine's monthly income. This effect aggregates to 0.6 percent of GDP. The estimated semi-elasticity between the proportion of population that accepts the secondary currency and GDP is 0.083.

tni.org/books/lugano.htm On Preserving Capitalism in the 21st Century -- By Susan George ---- What would you recommend if you wanted to preserve capitalism in the 21st century? A multidisciplinary Working Party convened by world leaders to consider the future of the world economy concludes that it is grossly undermanaged, gravely threatened by its own excesses, prone to ecological collapse and an unlikely candidate for long-term survival. How, then, can the winners in the globalisation game guarantee their own comfortable future? There is a way, but one which may be too awful to contemplate. The Lugano Report stakes out new territory and proceeds with relentless logic from uncompromising diagnosis to chilling cure. If this is the future, you will be moved to seek out a different one. In her appendix and afterword, Susan George challenges the conclusions of the Working Party and offers alternative solutions.

Europe's Rules Forcing U.S. Firms to Clean Up -- Unwilling to surrender sales, companies struggle to meet the EU's tough stand on toxics. ------- By Marla Cone -- Times Staff Writer -- May 16, 2005

Michael Pugliese wrote: Diamond is like a swimmer who competes in a race using only one arm. 'In caring for the health of our surroundings, just as of our bodies,' he writes at one point, 'it is cheaper and preferable to avoid getting sick than to try to cure illnesses after they have developed' – which sounds wise, but is simply misleading bombast. Technology brings out the worst in him. At one point he claims that 'all of our current problems are unintended negative consequences of our existing technology,' to which I felt like shouting in exasperation that perhaps at some times, in some places, a few of the unintended consequences of our existing technology have been beneficial. Reading Diamond you would think our ancestors should all have remained hunter-gatherers in Africa, co-evolving with the native flora and fauna, and roaming the wilds in search of wild berries and the occasional piece of meat.

I've read about a third of _Collapse_ and this bit really mischaracterizes the tone of the book (so far). Why the hell is it so hard to point out any problem with some technology without getting branded a Luddite? --- Andy

Is mathematics going pomo? In response to Andy (5th and last in thread) I go: approaching completion by way of alternating component detachments strikes me as pretty dangerous except in theory and fiction .. ..finnegan's wake comes to mind, apropo of which this anecdote:

Date: Sun, 8 May 2005 12:56:01 +0200 From: "john.kaman" <john.kaman@WANADOO.FR> Subject: FW: [J-JOYCE:3577] Re: Query from a friend I have a question as well; Joyce seems to be on the verge of becoming a cult figure in French mainstream cinema, in the sense that you can tell the good guys from the bad guys from their reading habits and often the good guys have read, are reading , etc., JJ's Ulysses in its French translation. Two examples:

1: "Anthony Zimmer, " a flashy French financial crook vs the French police and the Russian mafia flick, arrives at its climax in a completely empty house on the top of a hill just above Nice. I mean a totally empty house, no furniture no nothing, with two exceptions. There is a bare table and placed squarely in the middle of it is a French translation of JJ's Ulysses, title prominently displayed as the camera scans the room. The house belongs to the corrupt financier who redeems himself by giving all the money he has stolen back in return for the hand of Sophia Marceau.

2: "Tout pour plaire," a film about three women going through various superficial crises in mid life, presents a scene in which one of the three goes to the park in hopes of meeting someone. She sits silently on a park bench, ostentatiously displaying the book she is reading, again a French translation of JJ's Ulysses, I suppose to show her culture and sophistication. The book does not otherwise figure in the film.

Is this what it all comes to? The greatest novel of all time reduced to a stage prop? So far no FW sightings, although I wouldn't be surprised to see it lying around some space ship in the next chapter of Star Wars. Sigh. John http://hyperstition.abstractdynamics.org/archives/005280.html Hyperstition will henceforth sport 2 sets of comments (on-topic and tangential) after playing with the idea of calling the second 'piet pit' .. .

Goodbye USA -- In 2007 apparently.jpost.com/..cid=1111980180248 about a tsunami supposedly prophesied/coded in the Quran --

> "How did he reach that number? Silwadi said that by combing a number of suras hinting at US sins he reached the numbers 1776 (the year the US achieved independence) and 231. He added the two numbers and the result was 2007, the year when the US is expected to disappear."

------- on topic:

Tachi: That seems like a reliable method.

> Seriously though, think this brings us to an important issue - is prophesizing hyperstitional? Guess that would depend on whether prophesizing can bring about the reality of what is

------ tangential:

> IF THE OTHER ANIMALS CAN DO IT, WHY NOT WE?
> Much has been said about the animals, of all species, who fled in advance of the catastrophic tsunami. Almost no dead animals were found.

prophesized.

This topic is so Arguelles on the one hand and so not on the other since he wouldn't try to ridicule the Koran like zionist jpost does but just to get even I would suggest a look at the lots wilder correlation calc the zionist Ivry Dov shakes out of his sleeves collar and pantlegs (he'll probably call it inspired arbitration seeing he judges his impact to be on a par with that of Madonna), hell maybe he has stuff up his fly too though I don't recall him mentioning having any children though. root-1.co.il
I'll go see if I still got the Arg. on Quran stuff someplace quick.

by the way I am sick of natural truth being abused and kidnapped to serve 'relistatostutional' purposes:
"In his lengthy study, which is being circulated in many Muslim countries, Silwadi noted that the US has often been compared to a tree that grows very quickly and bears fruit, but has no roots."
Semitic success applied in concentrated fashion, to north africa has left nary a root in place; the HEbrow kind is the more diffuse creepily slow acting one but still crap in permacultural terms .. . .. is permaculture hyperstitional? It must be cause folks like Arguelles idealize it and proclaim it their aim and reward yet get hung up in calculations and proselytization efforts of the most trivial kind. Damn those recovering artists.

Tachi - great questions, definitely worth sustained attention.

My latest on this (should be implexed into a carrier of course): The crux of hyperstitional consistency, when reached, will address ('resolve'?) the basic problem of the philosophy of mathematics -- why do mathematical patterns prove so applicable to empirical reality? (OK, sure I've phrased that totally craply, but carry on ...) Hyperstition thus achieved would forestall the continuous relapse into atavistic Platonism that typically bedevils the issue (without obviously subsiding into some kind of Humean fuzz on the other side). That's to say, hyperstition postulates an as-yet uncondensed materialist response to

No definitive explanation has been given -- the general stab is that their senses are more attuned to small environmental changes imperceptible to homo sapiens. But it now appears that some of the most primitive tribes on earth living on the remote Andaman and Nicobar Islands which belong to India and were hit hard, also survived, apparently moving to safety before the waves hit. At first it was feared that they were wiped out or decimated. We can't interview the animals but I hope someone when things calm down takes the time to talk to these tribesmen. I think they could teach us a few things about staying in touch with nature.

Rainbow Miracle at the Windmill Inn

The White Spectral Wizard year (July 26, 2003-July 25, 2004) was the last year leading up to the Great Calendar Change of 2004! Magic and Miracles closed out this year in the form of a profound rainbow doorway opening to the Seven Years Mystery of the Stone (July 26, 2004-July 25, 2011). See live footage of something truly miraculous as hundreds of people are taken out of the technosphere and thrust directly into the essence of true magic! Continuing on to the next day as the Rainbow Bridge Meditation and Ceremony of Universal Forgiveness the magic lived on! (Two DVD's, 100 min.)

from the bookstore of the lawoftime.org (arguelles) site; I was trying to listen in on this the intrinsic 'realism' of numbers without sacrificing either mathematical exactitude (/infinitude) or the resilient non-ideality (empiricity) of nature.

It is from this 'crux' (= time disturbance) that your question about self-fulfilling prophecy and its limits could be adequately addressed, since these q.s concern the efficient interlinkage of mathematical intelligence (or at least pop-nomic culture) and natural causality - hence their proximity to (and the necessity of an adamant refusal of) speculative religious ideas.
The D&Gon War Machine is one postulated interchange mechanism situated in this hyperstitional space, for instance, converting its numbering pragmatics into vortical 'physics'. On my extremely tenuous understanding of Laruelle, his 'science' (= 'man') satisfies the same function.
Can Numbers (not 'quantities') cause an earthquake? Hoping the H. jury still out on this ...

Guess what, even that money is the same and that to me is the crux of the matter; indeed we need calendar reform but not one size fits all together now with each at their own station sorta thing.

Maybe there is new information. Maybe the cost-benefit situation has changed. Maybe. Maybe. You can’t blame this courageous and wise woman for possible side effects as the malaria resurgence a half-century down the line that all the king’s horses and all the king’s men, doctors, lawyers, and Indian chiefs did not forsee.

We were also told that TB was on its way out and now we’re heading for 1 billion cases world-wide in a few years.
Comment by Dov Ivry — 2/28/2005 @ 2:28 am

If the Spectator article is correct, then Rachel Carlson does have a lot to answer for. It seems that Dov Ivry didn’t bother to read it.

I do have a bone to pick with the article, however. It states that malaria is caused by virus. That is untrue. Malaria is caused by a protozoan parasite.

http://members.lycos.nl/vadercats/PacalVotanJudgmentDay.htm 89K

By his preparation and mastery of higher spiritual practices, meditation, telepathy, and profound displacement, Pacal Votan was able to gather the information he needed concerning the spiritual progress, or lack of it, and level of cultural universality among the human species in order to make the final determination for his tomb and prophecy, Telektonon. The evaluation of Pacal's mission is the prophecy, Telektonon. As Pacal Votan's evaluation of the progress and development of Universal Religion on the Earth, the Telektonon cannot be separated from the Mission of the Prophet Muhammad and the rehearsing and compilation of the Holy Qur'an, the Earthly Judgement Day Book. The Qur'an was completed just before the death of the Prophet, AD 632, one year after Pacal Votan had entered his time of power at the age of 28, in AD 631. The Holy Qur'an or Judgement Day Book is, of necessity, about humanity’s trial on Earth and its relation to its own end time. The time science of the Maya, administered by Pacal Votan, is the calibration of the final human cycle of judgement, leading to the Day of Judgement. The Telektonon, revealed at the beginning of the Day of Judgement, AD 1993- 94, confirms the Holy Qur'an as the last word on Judgement Day.

The Holy Qur’an: The Judgement Day Book Just as the Maya mathematic and time science is unique among and superior to all other known mathematical and calendric systems, so is the Holy Qur'an unique among and even superior to all other known books or revealed texts. So distinctive is the Qur'an and so blind is the Judeao-Christian prejudice against historic Islam, that it may also be said that the Qur'an, by reputation, is perhaps the least understood and most intentionally ignored of sacred texts. This circumstance is also intended to be corrected by the Judgement Day Plan of Pacal Votan. The Qur'an is the direct word of Allah, the One Divine Creative Source, recited and rehearsed by His appointed Messenger, Muhammad, between the years AD 610-632. Not only is every single word in the Qur'an exactly as Muhammad received it, but Muhammad himself arranged the Qur'an in its final form. This form has not changed throughout the last 1300 years, and there is only one version or edition of the Qur'an. It is the quality of unchanging perfection of form that distinguishes the Qur'an as an indispensable and indisputable teaching on the qualities and nature of Universal Religion. At the same time, the Qur'an is also very specific to its time and culture while being precisely attuned to the overall spiritual condition of humanity at the approach of Judgement Day. Consisting of 114 Suras or chapters, the text of the Qur'an is radically non-linear. The Qur'an may be described as the dialogue between Allah and His Messenger Muhammad. Like a magnificent musical score, the Qur'an weaves and repeats different themes and stories, never exactly in the same way twice, each repetition being like the turning of a facet of a jewel or crystal. The one all-encompassing theme of the Qur'an is the inevitability of Judgement Day. From the perspective of the Universal Religion, Judgement Day is the moment of ultimate > meaning, the test of humanity's ability to evolve into spiritual unification. Judgement Day is not a punishment or a reward imposed on humanity, but a fulfillment of the undeviating law of karma. According to the Qur'an, if one does wrong it is only to the detriment of one's own soul. If one does good, it is only to the benefit of one's own soul. Allah is "Master of the Day of Judgement," because He is the Author of all creation, and in the divine plan of the universal cycle, "all things tend toward Allah." As the denouement of human spiritual evolution, Judgement Day is actually one of five main motifs that distinguish the Qur'an. Thematically these five interwoven motifs may be constructed according to the principle of the five radial castles of time:

> 1. The divine unity of all creation, Red Eastern Castle initiates
> 2. Universal spiritual precepts, White Northern Castle refines
> 3. Lives and history of the messengers, Blue Western Castle transforms
> 4. Judgement Day and karmic law, Yellow Southern Castle ripens
> 5. Triumph of the Religion of Truth, Green Central Castle synchronizes
> All five of these themes are intricately interwoven by sets of metaphors and similitudes throughout the Suras.

the trouble with the fuckers on the left (in my scheme here ((I posited the right on the left)); not to confuse you further) is the ignorance and supression concerning (herkunft/afkomst/ origin of) the very virtues they beat their chests about, vibrant health; immune system that is effective enough to induce a form of overconfidence that causes a problematically exacerbating paradox to the exact degree it causes/facilitates the neglect to feed the most ancient sentientizing stream (better feed e- that revolution) and keep it coming with the mineral manipulations I refer to tirelessly to stop the holes in other people's pabulum as tirelessly as I can (not very lately).

I don't know any disciplines of distribution (besides the rule confirming exceptions like seercentre and the like, some permaculture outfits and other isolates) that do not turn this esthetic, ethic, to all parties involved and in future affected, entirely enjoyable recruitment of an indispensible ally into its mirror image and start looking for an enemy to fight (projections of the consequence of their choice; automated prophetizing ((telltale warning sign to others)) inherent and rudimentary to psychic processes).

The difference is that before simply preventable lack, deprivation and depletion induced diseases get under the skins of the more complex mulicellullar beings a stage (like this, our very own age) during which denial and defiance regarding admission of perps' own wrong choices (can't go soft now can we?) must be lived through/down; it leaves 'm with enough strength to rage around in the world at large outside and thus polarize and distract from the necessary, needful and yes, redemptive acts (reconciling immediate mercy and long term provision).

Turned into their opposite such substitutions prove equally stupid and delusional as asserting that night is really day, black is really white, and the like are and that is, always half a turn off and away from truth, always static, always arresting, stunning, shocking, conjuring tense moment, looking for the elusive switch in all the wrong places, more and more desperately, hijacking technology to where it serves nary any other purpose.

A next stage/remove away from an embodied and embedded coherence, a harmony with surroundings is the barrier thrown up by internalization; a proliferation of impermeable borders to reflect the ones they neglect to loosen and lessen. This is the numbdumbdown all stuporifics offer (and subconsciously translates into a danger sign they must struggle against harder, which they then do but even more ineffectually and that's to put this way past clinical i- going on desolation nicely); This is the reason blustering machos with high testosterone levels go for dangerous stimulants of all sorts (environmental, physical, social and mental), they have to put themselves to the test. Confront that brutal and fierce devil may care fit to burst knowitall cando selfmade distortion of reality. Tone it down a little, blunt the bluster a little. --

Rock Dust -- Thursday, 23 August 2001

Paul Willis investigates how one Queensland farmer accidentally stumbled upon a revolutionary way to vastly improve his tropical soils. By carrying out his own experiments, the farmer discovered waste from a local quarry was having a remarkable effect on his crops. But how does it work? With the help of James Cook University we find out. Reporter: Paul Willis -- Producer: Louise Heywood ---- Researcher: Rob Hodgson ---- Story Contacts: Ross Coventry Email -- James Cook University --- Townsville --------- Full Program Transcript:

Narration: Sometimes a scientific breakthrough comes from the most unexpected sources! Sam Catalano was once just an ordinary farmer struggling to make a living on poor tropical soils. But now his life has been turned around, simply by watching his cattle in their paddock. He noticed his cows loved to graze at one particular spot. The grass of course was greener there, and Sam had a hunch why. On Sam's farm there's a quarry producing crushed basalt for road base. Each day the mining trucks are washed down and the rock dust flowed into Sams paddock just where the cows liked to graze. If quarry dust could make his grass grow better, would it have the same effect on his crops?

Paul Willis: In the early days when you go up to someone and say "I'm putting dust on my crops and it's just from the local quarry" what sort of reaction did you get?

Sam Catalano "You're a nut!" But anyway. You had to be careful who you spoke to because they'd want to bloody certify you, you'd gone mad"

Narration: But local opinion didn’t stop Sam! And soon he had results. It worked! His cane grew more vigorously and had a higher sugar content. And his bananas were bigger, healthier and stronger! Now Sam didn’t feel like a nut any longer! Time to take his results to the scientists.

Ross Coventry: I was approached by Sam back in 1995 when I first joined the university after a career with CSIRO in Townsville and Sam came with some interesting ideas.

Narration: Convinced there was something in it, Ross started looking into how the magical dust worked. Farmland in this area is typically cleared rainforest. Soils are nutrient poor and highly acidic. Ross discovered that the rock dust, reduced the soils acidity. It also allowed the soil to retain and supply more nutrients to plants. And it improved the structure of the soil. No wonder the plants loved it! So with science behind him, Sam went into production.

Paul Willis: This is the finely ground waste rock from the quarry, Sam takes it and turns it into dust. This unique rock grinding plant was designed by Sam, with a little help from a couple of mates.

Sam Catalano: Well producing the dust wasn’t a problem, the problem was how do you handle it. What do you do with it? How do you convey it, how do you move it because it’s so fine, so dusty, how do you enclose it.

Narration: Sam’s having the last laugh now; he’s started selling his rock dust, both here and overseas. Last year alone he sold over 2000 tons! He is living proof that anyone can be a scientist really. All it takes is a good idea, and a curious mind.

Sam Catalano: I was adamant and I guess I’m stubborn. If I’ve made up my mind I believe in something, I believe in it and I won’t let go in a hurry.

hell money??? In China, the word Hell doesn't carry the same negative connotation as western Hell. The popular story has it that zealous Christian missionaries warned all non-Christian Chinese they'd 'go to Hell' upon death.In a classic case of misinterpretation, the Chinese believed Hell was the English term for the Afterlife. The word was incorporated and printed on the traditional Chinese Afterlife Monetary Offerings, otherwise known as Hell Bank Notes.
http://bigwhiteguy.com/baskets/hell.php
The two most traditional times of year to burn Hell Bank Notes are during Ching Ming (The Festival of Pure Brightness) and Yue Laan (The Hungry Ghost Festival). Another delivery method is to toss it in the air during the funeral procession or leave it on the grave of the deceased any time one desires.

ctheory.net/text_file.asp?pick=128 all sorts of deep thought on Northernness (russian spirituality; Glenn Gould the Bach tweaker):

> "Finland has capitalized on her northernness and backwoodness, first as a nation-state, and later as a transnational actor. She is remarkably relevant in a post-national world, politically, economically and socially. Also, in terms of global etiquette, Finland's northernness rhymes with political correctness: the country is green, environmental, non-NATO, UN-loving, liberal, tolerant, dolphin-friendly, free-range, low-cholesterol, > low-maintenance, and on top of all that, run by a female president. A green dream and a Northern construct.

> Finland, being perfectly aware of her peripheral position, never seriously tried to change it, either by constructing her own centrality or by joining some other existing center. Instead, Finland has come to prominence in a new (electronic) world in which traditional center-periphery relationships are relativized and inversed. Today, it is not so much that Finland has become a center as that the whole world has become a periphery. Centers become increasingly pointless and numerous peripheries proliferate, dictating new norms of urban planning, economic life and group identities (e.g. Orange County in California). The North, a periphery par excellence, has therefore turned out to be perfectly suited to our unexciting tomorrows."

From what I know the upper scandinavian countries have at least one problem similar to the nether ones: the imported the desert meme; those infected and furiously breeding do so on the margins of thereby more and more curbed middle class comfortzones (the former try get the latter’s amenities by hook or by crook) which is under a double front attack; people are trying to break away from their very own ranks into topmanagerhood where an ardent and inyour face push beyond limits of decency is going on; the shamelessness of inept, misfiring and misdirected desire in double phase is a truly tragic sight that moots all the pretty considerations uttered in that article. It seems that sooner or later everybody feels perfectly justified to display primitive depraved appetite and depriving greed in the face of everybody else paying attention to mass media from the other side of the glass. --- These are the topics in Peter Sloterdijk’s new book.

this man is brilliant (if slightly militant; born in the year of the rat explains that) - I had completely forgotten about him . ..always lived under the impression he was an older man but mistakenly as it turns out now. A bit of added (or overlooked till now) bio says he left the starting gate(s of eden; title of lates addition) in 1972; 14 years younger than me!!!!

In the Etana legend, a reference occurs to Zu, who, as it would appear, is unable to escape from the control of the supreme judge Shamash. Zu is there called the chief worker of evil - a kind of arch satan. A story has been found which illustrates an attempt made by the bird Zu to break loose from the control of the sun. A storm was viewed as a conflict between the clouds and the sun, much as an eclipse symbolized a revolt in the heavens. The myth represents the conflict as taking place between Zu and En-lil, the Bel of Nippur. The latter holds in his possession the tablets of fate, by means of which he enjoys supreme authority over men and gods. Zu's jealousy is aroused, and he plans to tear these tablets from En-lil.

Daniel Winter? (danwinter.com/GermanAdvisory - English.html)

Here follows some background on this clumsy piece of charlatanry. Dan Winter was convicted by several courts in the USA, including the US Federal Court and the US Bankruptcy Court of North Carolina, for representing as his own work the work of various scholars, among others the research of Stan Tenen on the Hebrew alphabet, which constitutes an act of plagiarism, and in addition for adulterating the contents [of the other scholars' work]. Moreover, Winter published under his own name and sold for profit the works of these scholars in the form of books, CD-Roms and videos. The court therefore sentenced him after a number of trials to pay more than $100,000 compensation plus legal costs to the parties affected,1 and furthermore confirmed in writing that he was guilty of 'malicious behaviour with criminal intent'.2 That happened several years ago, and yet Winter has still not paid a single dollar3 -- on the putative grounds that he has no income.

To quote Dr LaViolette from his book, (about the astrophysics etc. of the Galactic SuperWave - compression?) ---

"Earth Under Fire";

"According to a legend told by the Hopi Indians, the present world civilization is not the first to populate the earth. Before this one, there were three other "worlds", each terminated by a global catastrophe. They call the present world cycle the "Fourth World", and claim that it too like the others before it, will one day come to an end. They say that this ending will be heralded by the appearance of Saquasohuh, the Blue Star spirit.
Since the cores of distant exploding galaxies are observed to have a bright blue star-like appearance, it is reasonable to expect that the core of our own Galaxy would have a similar appearance during its explosive phase. So the legendary appearance of the Blue Star could be referring to an explosion of our Galaxy's core.... Several hundred years after the first appearance of the Blue Star, earth observers would have become aware of lighting effects resulting from the Superwave's passage through the galaxy's central buldge. Sychrotron radiation emitted by the Superwave's cosmic rays, would have illuminated the dense gas clouds in the Galaxy's nucleus to create an oval luminous form around the Blue Star...Dense clouds of dust obscure visible light coming from this region. However, during its bright active phase, some light would have penetrated. This frightening spectacle may have appeared to ancient inhabitants as a gigantic punishing "Eye" in the sky, the entire form occupying about a 16 degree field of view, or about 32 solar diameters. The "iris", would have a diameter of about, 4 degrees with a brilliant light emanating from its central pupil--the Blue Star."

---Paul LaViolette etheric.com author of Galactic Superwave - also writes: 4/17/05 (in response to my note) from Dan: "it seems to me - that the concept of self similar or fractal arrangement for dialectric charge centers (capacitors in a cone optimized by phi - making gravity) may be essential principle? >>" to which Paul responds: "I don't know exactly what you mean by the above. My concept is simple: positive charge (protons) produce positive mass (G potential wells), negative charge (electrons) produce negative mass (G potential hills). Contrary to general relativity, there are two polarities for gravity and these are correlated with electric charge. These are predictions from a theory I have developed called subquantum kinetics. Thus far subquantum kinetics has had 10 of its a priori predictions verified by observation so this sets it appart from most other theories on electrogravitics.

If you want to learn more about my work in this area I suggest you read my book Subquantum Kinetics and my paper on the B-2 which is in the book Electrogravitics Systems edited by T. Valone. They can be ordered from Amazon.com or at the etheric.com website.,Best regards, Paul LaViolette"

No longer awaiting better days I (poetpiet) decided to go ahead and lie to lycos(-europe)(as punishment for not telling me why they discontinued hosting the 60Mb I was steadily adding onto at vadercats so very abruptly) and switch from their european free space meddle/peddle back to mama tripod where perhaps I shall be allowed to allow running my messengeritis its full and due course and continue my colourful pseudobloggage tote tout and teazery (even if it kills me but i hope it culminates in an offer of the sort I can't refuse like vast specie and age mixed tree constituted shade, naturally and cleanly running water with a fast internet connection) .. . off we go hoping to be here to stay.

For the past few weeks (since google dropped the cache; don't know exactly when they did, I was up and around a mountain for 3 weeks) the youngest archived version in this soon enough 8 year old series of links rambles comments and correspondence at all available (via roundabout route) was: vadercats/nov04.htm --- the last logbriefer.htm available was from april 2004 ---- when trying to track disapparacido digits use this //web.archive.org/web/*/ plus (entire) target url my first thoughts and findings after pondering and searching for the unearthly reasons why my vadercats site got blocked by Lycos management (just when I was going to do some copious referring to the historically very real poet/statesman from the 15th century (golden age founding?) Jacob Cats):

lycos is blocked in china, in fact a ridiculous number of the sites listed as blocked on this page http://cyber.law.harvard.edu/filtering/china/China-M.html are hosted by lycos tripod .. . .. .heh heh. .. .l just realize I am acting upon the assumption that lycos-europe will at best get the cast-offs from tripod (if they get anything at all anymore rather than orders to give in and keep the name prominent or some such thing) but are more likely dissociated from and certainly not beholden to them; registering for a tripod.com thing shows otherwise but I'll take the gamble.

serious anti-semitism (the hostility to arabs variety) doesn't seem to appear to be a problem: http://members.lycos.nl/whatsthisthen/links.html the site seems to have stopped receiving additions in februari, not long after adding this: Miracles of Nineteen by CroMagnon (pbuh): faithfreedom.org/forum/viewtopic.php?p=108647

I am sure you'd agree we can do dishonour and discredit to a world unfortunately less and less full of them (trees, especially the majestic entire familytrees harbouring, housing and and hosting ones) should we come up with a subsuming concept for 'm all and call 'it', 'the one and only' tree – it would be dead in the same sense god is dead (yet 'lesser' god alive).

That man nevertheless tears entire forests out in order to write about that one and only (a maternal and hysteric functionality that is flooding and distorting (sorta populating) other forms of experience) must be offensive to all ya gods out there and entirely the result of sensory deprivation in service of controlmechanisms trying to deal with and more often than not exploit the actual birthrates.

I've recently read an interpretation roughly like the one offered above but couldn't find it again yesterday (perhaps Brian Leiter)

Innit funny how we speak of lines rather than squiggles of flight
All the straightness analoges of reason, logos and consistency in super and over vision and sight have their base in the angul and linearity of light but what happens when we bend and curve it via the terrestrial magnetics? It gets absorbed, stored and starts acting and dancing out the craziest rhythms, and the beckoning that is the reckoning and atttractofactoring, tempts the light to go for this hide and seek throught particular arrays (nothing to do with magical squares and the sort of mathematrix madness that ob- and posseses thus waylaid and caught in an unnourishing sterility gematrianical or worse monotheistical thinkers). To be very close (very few items and timestamps away) to the topic, science, comments on and philosophy of this phenomena (see quotes below also) like Mark is (so sure of himself he needs no comment nor pay attention to any, even the ones on a place he nevertheless sees himself fit to post), he concludes his latest

> 'MEGALITH ASTROPUNK' with 'To be in the village is to assume a role in an aeonic structure. As Matthew observes at the very end of the last episode, Time is itself a kind of circle. Matthew and his father's flight from the not quite closed circle is in its own way an integral part of the cybernetics of the Petros-machine as is the other villagers submission to it. Control needs something to control, no circuit can function without an Outside, no circle is ever completely closed. Petros needs you.'

is rather unbelievable to me. Even less do I fathom how somebody can live with, much less be happy with macabre slurs, an inflammatory fireside fabulation fanned cosmic detective story that insists stars are angels and rocks are fallen and banished ones. > The master crystal oscillator heartbeat arranging the flowering lotus petals of magnetism on the Earth, is her natural bell like ring: the Schumann resonance. When this heartbeat penetrates a bioregion, harmony results. The eminent biophysicist author Professor Phil Callahan has measured this happening. First he showed that the amount of the Earth's magnetic heartbeat which could penetrate the soil (by symmetry) was an excellent predictor of how well plants would grow. In essence this is the principle that it is order that is food. This helped us to understand why stone circle engineering, particularly in the presence of ritual, was the best and cheapest fertilizer around.

> Remineralization and ground granite inject new access to the symmetry or spin of starlight into the ground, where plants can touch in to it. Chelation or grinding is how the fires in the Earth digest starlight mineral into the maximum surface to volume glatial fines which plants can dissolve "consume". Cooked food likewise uses the fire outside self to consume perspective; raw food uses the fire inside self to consume perspective into flame. As the emotional flame of blue fire is nourished by live food, this explains the true physics of en-joy-meant. When the blue flame rises from the lower glands to envelope the whole body, a kind a grail cup of electrical pressure snakes up to impedance couple

PP - there is no outside and inside, in the sense that warrants hermetic identity. The skin does not delineate a internal space; one can actually follow the contours of the skin to the internal organs .. its not a matter of not being able to deal with binaries, but in not believing in them. They are a convenient way of navigating through time and space, though ultimately reality is more complex. At least three ...

look, assuming for a mo it can be directed somehow, where would you rather find the rub is (and radionically speaking, the rub sticks [[and being stuck builds breakthrough pressure; unsubtle example: terrorists set up one way circuits {{{binary extremism, get your throat cut and you're a nogo}}} and hope to carry their putrid juice destillates on- and into the id (p)reservation]]), between organs or between rocks?

hello darkness, our new friend -- Winter Music
Gloryfying in darkness, Dark Side understands that, like ecstasy, dread arises from a sense that former certainties are mutable. That's why horror texts, which belong to what James Donald has called 'the vulgar sublime,' speak most powerfully in times of unease.

I'm sick. So I'm going to let someone else do the writing. Linked above is a piece on Dark Side written by Mar (k-punk) Fisher for the New Statesman & Society in 1994. Describing Dark's "displace[ment] of dread into celebration," Fisher posits horror as a more apt ontological frame than realism in a society spiraling into violent social decay. Conceptually, this is what I find most compelling about Dark Side - the way it ceded to the morbidity of the era, confronting darkness and celebrating through it, rather than despite it. I'd say America looks ripe for the spawning of its own Dark Side equivalent, but I won't hold my breath (more on that later). For now, at least, old time Darkness remains my soundtrack for the sensory hell that is winter in Ottawa.

--- cites a term Baudrillard coined to denote politicians: 'pornographers of indifference'

--- this is yet another music blog (if you can call all this nervous idle revving rave noise music that is). My opinion does not deter this blogger to describe yet another one such tune thus: the moment when hallucination and physical environment would collide and shatter the ego into incommensurable bits.

there are 2 comments under the next item posted to this blog that really took a cue from this one and here is a sequel:

http://k-punk.abstractdynamics.org/archives/002285.html
Kneale apparently saw the serial as a requiem for the Sixties: a dark parable about the thanatropic drives which youth messianism could nurture. In place of the hippie dream of a renewed Earth, his trance-intoxicated postpunk protocrusties - the Planet People - long for an escape into another world, another solar system. Quatermass' landscape was projected directly out of seventies' anxieties.
The breathtaking audacity of Unknown Pleasures, after all, lay in its presumption that youth culture was essentially thanatoid. ....Kneale's usual cybergothic methodology – disinterring Now in the relics of the Deep Past – focuses on Neolithic stone circles. Quatermass hypothesizes that the megalithic sites are trauma records, the stones arranged as commemorations of mass exterminations. The Earth's scar tissue. (The parallel between astropocalyptic events and stone circles had actually been made three years earlier, in ITV's memorably creepy children's programme from1976, Children of the Stones.) The stone circles were the sites of what Quatermass ominously refers to as previous 'harvestings' of the human race. Who can guess what the species reaping humanity is like and what their motivations are? A protein lust? Quatermass can only guess.

What strikes me is, once again, the fundamental diff between this kind of intello and me, those avoiding instead of/rather than on the lookout for any and all changes to turn this: disinterring Now in the relics of the Deep Past — into this: digging up suitable rock crushing it and exposing it to weather/growth/ time/surface/ biospherical onramp cause you realize that in over and across the big rounds the rock as a form of deep past thus contains the near future across a now that can as engaged and endearing as as histories horrors gathered into a black hole and turned inside out; all in easily demonstrable and exquisite fashion studiously avoided by those encrypting the simplest evergoing neverending crosscosmic (never mind race class gender, specie or planet) universality

A linkpal of axis's revived the Dylan lyrics post and I thankfully added this: I'll spare (some of) you the trouble finding it -- not that easy if unsavvy and up on napsteresque trackytrucktrick but do happen to be able to find a real player whereever you at + the bit in the hyperstition-conversation file (link at top)

hey 'exsis' (excess?), do you link to all the muddle heads that are in love with you and/or confusionism as much as you are (like saggitipotent, see my response to his echoing the 'Dark Side' genre) such as oozes out of Warwick (they might as well call it [[cerebral smoke]]Bombwick) . .. . as far as this digital design oriented post is concerned, I am more impressed with a contest designbyfire.com/000096.html posted on my birthday, a fight between gurus and bloggers (for pay vs for free?). The winner of one of the rounds is original enough and this will interest you numonumbojumatrian even more, he compiled a long list of other Nathans, perhaps due to liking the fact that he leads the pack (eyeing potential clientele, seeing if they are rich enough to pay big bucks for the url he snatched ahead of them).

Ps: I am beginning to wonder what WarWick looks like . .. . and also what 'it' might be that makes UKers such bipolar, control freaky, manipulatory and mean in the wrong sense of a once all good word on the one hand and on the other such off the handle flying sick fucks (truth and consequence? cause and effect? insular claustrophobia, blessed peace and plenty of pleasant mammories - calcium?) Look at this:

> "Why has rave music begun to poach its ideas and moods from horror films and fiction? Mark Fisher argues that "Dark Side" gives voice to the dread of Britain today" ---- sagittipotent..../hello-darkness-our-new-friend. original location: http://autonomicforthepeople.blogspot.com "Dark Side borrows its ontology from horror and science fiction. Its implied world is hi-tech Hobbesian. Track titles, and vocal samples imported from video, suggest casual homicide, ultraviolence, survivalist individualism." -----

OK, what have we here? A personification of 'dark side', instead of associating (dark) along empirical nonpsychoburdenend sensory lines (with exclusion of light [[note: rather serious source of the earth's energy, both stored and future if we get to have one]], closed very tight - rock) it is turned from an allie and resource into a harsh threat, from something that gives hold support, foundation, example of patience and reliability (yeah I know it's hard not to anthromorphisize either way - everybody wants to touch the pretty woman and some do wether she likes it or not giving her the forgivable impression there aint very many good guys left, let alone opps to choose from an array and never mind sending 'm out to aid distant siblings in distress rite???????? Look at an american princess such as yorsulf: flying all around 'the country' [[occupied continent is more to the point]] on a spur for some grant or another and you can't say a single thing about soldiers for as long as I've known you know????????). The ascribing of activity to 'dark side' is of course not erroneous, not in the wrong, nor in the right direction but the quality is quite drastically different; whatever it is that works in the dark (trace minerals as indispensible harmonizer or bad vibes as invasive horror) can in no small part, will for a fair portion and must for good measure find its impulse and perpetuation in the real thing, that is to say, us humans, by (activity inspired by humblest and therefore by definition forever unholiest book) hook or (.. . . . ..you get to decide if you see what I mean all by yourself here . .. .) crook

How to own up to good, nay the best chunks of the world's mentally and emotionally (besides the already mentioned physically) unnecessary darkness.I've just (4-5 page up key taps) alluded to tangible forms but there is also (the metaph- and allegorical versions) your (and only your) world's darkness. They used to overlap till ownership of land went way to far, beyond what was actively and delegatorily guardable. Well, the answer is to first of all stop at doing that (owning up) and so to and for anybody else, other folk, far off and foreign holdstrongs and clutchlings, thus doing 'm down and in while taking and putting them out, causing clumpage and clutter on an even more massive scale than is naturally excessive already. Different from way-, hill- and mountainside, subsoil, riverbed and gullyedge rock and gravel the figurative forms are much more strictly private and in case of 'success' fixed ideation, often outlasting institutionalization, without strong arm enforcement, in one word, internalized 'encultsurement'.

To make a story that threatens to be longer than wakefullness is alloted me tonite and I don't like to go to sleep with the idea that I have words to string along or worse, that I am starting to be a writer, shorter, let me just say in (and jump to a best possible) conclusion:

don't waste too much time pointing out impunitous appropriation by third parties (stealing going on all around you, those portions the owners need [[to be reunited with]] to own up and learn to be responsible for, happy with, loving to, etcetera, projected into a hell then used as a pool of spectres to hound prospective victims/recruits with ---- thus constituting the very hell they pretend to be out averting).

the following got 'nicked' 'ZioSem' in 2019 and became a parallel series, sometimes cutting the 'main mix' in half, i marked passages like this one '--sem--' and then collated them

Don't jump the bandwagon (even and especially should their reputation be headed and aimed for the highest of superlative reputes [[examples: judaism, christianity, islam, voortreffelijk = excellent; overtreffende trap is the ladder/rocket of exxageration and superlative like good-better-best]], and they are posthumously praised for living up to it, being the expert and capable harvester of all exaggerations, the well meaning, as well as the patient in suffering). To make a long conclusion into an ultra short story: Jesus is jew bait, don't bite him or think he will in any way nourish you, heal your wounds, repair your autonomy, and help with whatever else you need doing around the sorry excuse for an existence you cannot (at this frightfully killing hour) without understandable resentment and shock become a little more aware of.

Zie verder ook Masters 1984, 340-341, cat. nr. 117: 'He [= Cats] interpreted a scene of a man with a lute as suggestive of the emotional empathy of lovers. As the strings of the musical instruments resonate, so the 'heartstrings' of two lovers sound as one.'

> Apart from personal events and generic fancies Leonardo uses the cryptos to express discoveries that would have costed his head if published. Leonardo had an intense attraction for optics. As Prof Angioleri has shown by putting together bits and pieces of information astutely scattered between different notebooks, he did construct microscopes, long views and telescopes of excellent characteristics. What could he do with a 30 meters focal length parabolic mirror except watching the stars? But there is no hint of celestial observations in the writings of Leonardo. By pure chance in examining some macro photos I had made at an Adoration I discovered in Vienna, I found first Jupiter and its moons, precisely represented as seen from above the ecliptic, to the beard of Galileo, and that the dark blue mantle of the Madonna contains a very deep sky map with nebulae, Dust Clouds and all the rest.
> My plan now is to take my discovered Leonardo pieces and write an essay for each of them. The results may be officially accepted in 50 years, and I am a little short of time to wait so long, so the short term decision is to post them in this site. Just wait and see.

Media Courage --- impossible pedagogy in an artificial community by Fred Issek

Columbine gunminimen anybody?? I know this is going over tired old ground without a trace of fresh ground or even grinding intentions but .. . . she puts it so that the common man can make sense of these (Ren Hoek voice): I D I O T S ! !! ! ! !

> While his intention is to deconstruct the horizon of philosophy, it is not Nancy's intention to propose > an “other politics.” Rather, the necessity of the “plural singular of origin comes into play.” There is no new politics or community, for it has been philosophy in its mistaken singularity that has linked itself to a “community of essence.” This process of community building, according to Nancy, requires sacrifice. “If one looks carefully, one can find the place of sacrifice in all political philosophy (or rather, one will find the challenge of the abstract, which makes a sacrifice of concrete singularity). But as singular origin, existence is unsacrificable” (Being Singular Plural 25). Just like Georges Bataille with his community of absence, Nancy is pointing out that all community building implies an essence that leaves as a remainder all that which is unassimilated. This logocentric essence is the “One.” “The One as purely one is less than one; it cannot be, be put in place, or counted. One as properly one is always more than one. It is an excess of unity; it is one-with-one, where its Being in itself is copresent” (40). Nancy blames philosophy’s preoccupation with essence and community building for much of humankind’s expectation of togetherness.

>
> Nancy points out that it was Georges Bataille who first noticed this and called it the “inner experience” which is tied up with a sense of the community as, “neither a work to be produced, nor a lost communion, but rather as space itself, and the spacing of the experience of the outside, of the outside-ofself.” The space around the self is the self’s proximity to others, in this case, the proximity of community in death. The community of absence is a community built around a longing for something that is not there. As Benammar writes of Nancy and his longing for community, “The community is not a political community, such as the one proposed by communism, which espoused not only common goals but also common and equal rewards. The community is not part of our history. There is no mythical past in which we had a community, community is not a lost garden of Eden: the community is yet to come, the community still lies in our future” (Benammar). Like Bataille, Nancy sees community as absence, acquiring an identity only around that which is missing. In our longing and in our mortal isolation, we are community, seeing in the other the conditions of our own birth and death.
>
> Bataille, along with Nancy and others, realized community’s impossibility. Bataille’s contribution to this understanding was to seek the community without a head. As Nancy pointed out, there is no “community of essence,” for such an essence would imply a sacrifice of something. Concrete singularity is usually sacrificed in the name of an abstraction that supposedly pulls community together; or the Other is sacrificed in the name of the One, excluded because it does not fit in. In the case of the Acephale sacrifice, the head is offered up, so that headless, the group is unified without a principle, without a logos, or the imposition of any abstraction or essence on their primal sense of community. In this way, the individual partakes in community, without having his or her freedom negated.
> In “Bataille’s Columbine: The Sacred Space of Hate,” Andrew Wernick likens the sacrifice of Klebold and Harris to the sacrificial gesture of Bataille’s Acephale – or headless - Society.

Ps: I wound up on this depressing page while going through 19 gooooooooooooooooooogles worth of Laurence Rickels pages (sadly, my fave, ‘musicphantoms’ didn’t show up, neither the colourful nor the printerfriendly version), most of what I found contain mere mentions of his involvements):

> Conflict resolution is a trick. “The ability to win an argument is the ability to create a complex form in which people can't see that it's a suppressed premise that is the thing that allows you to persuade them; or they can't find out what your suppressed premise is, and are thus unable to respond adequately to what you're saying” (Ulmer answering Rickels).

> Author: Neocleous M.1 Abstract: This article aims to show the importance of the vampire metaphor to Marx's work. In so doing, it challenges previous attempts to explain Marx's use of the metaphor with reference to literary style, nineteenth-century gothic or Enlightenment rationalism. Instead, the article accepts the widespread view linking the vampire to capital, but argues that Marx's specific use of this link can be properly understood only in the context of his critique of political economy and, in particular, the political economy of the dead.

Given time and proper inputs, a Redwood forest can begin to change first the microclimate and eventually, the climate of an entire region. We've got to be thinking long term, not just about what might make our lives better. How can we explain what we're doing to the middle-class suburbanites on whose land the food will need to be grown when the oil runs out?

> The metaphoric regard to that which gives life, is life and becomes life, is perhaps one of the few > truly remarkable gifts given by that malaise of mankind, western religion. The adage, "ashes to ashes, dust to dust," is a polite euphemism for what should be screamingly clear: our shit, despicable as it may seem, is whence we spring (to choose to be shit is up to each individual) and where we all go. The evolutionary process, not unlike that which prompted early humanoids to evolve opposable thumbs, may well have been the same mechanism that was guided by our subconscious to symbolize sexually the very cycle of life. Like its sister organs -- the next door neighbors that provide the pathways for popping out offspring -- the anus has its own sensuous ends which no threat of cretinous crusade may effectively curb. What goes in tasting good comes out pleasurably, too, for that anal tongue, the prostrate (in men) and proximity to the G-spot (in women) lets us love our shit in no way nicely discoursed in public.

> The shortcut through the sphincter, however, lends one the ability to apply direct pleasure on the prostate -- much like a good shit. The prostrate has much in common with the female's G-spot: they each originate from the very same embryonic tissue, are both situated in the same basic area and, most importantly, are best reached by going in through the excrementally recognized "back door." Yes, their lord's movements are mysterious in its ways and yet the very servants are forever attempting to attenuate "his" methods.

> Darwin estimated that on every acre of his land some eighteen tons of soil was brought to the surface annually by the action of earthworms. --------- Also, Darwin's book on earthworms was an important book because prior to it, gardners, soil scientists, farmers, and other people regarded earthworms as harmful pests to be eliminated. This book argued sucessfully that earthworms were beneficial animals to have in a person's gardens, farm fields, and pastures.

Check wikipedia for the only way to make polarizations equitably productive under 'stone meal' and 'rock flour' ... and now .. .. I mean .. .meanwhile. .. it's back to the more prevalent forms of those that can't seem to make the grade, wouldn't want such mesh and think they'll be fine enough without it.

This isn't much of an answer since no question were posed but I suspect it will pass as a compli- and complementation:

Thoughts on reading pre turn of the century usenet newsgroup soc.religion.islam messages and the striking resemblance (apart from degree of chronicity) to what transpired the last week of may on LBO (Left Business observer) wherein John Bizwas is accused of/analyzed as being (a pseudo used by) Louis Proyect (marxmail; wrote useful criticism of Diamond recently) by Kelley after an admittedly rather suspect 'exchange' with the listmom Doug (they basically accused each other of exactly the same thing as do the usenetters). All the more suprising since not long before that Doug had mentioned how they recently ate together and had trucefully declared being tired of the years (and years) old antagonism.

I added the quotation marks around exchange in the sentence before last bycause as in most human cases of cultural rivalry the offers of 'versed in truth' skill are 1: returned to senders after being rebranded accusations/self confessions, 2: identical 'right on their side' rhetorics which are not so much offered as held up along with a claim to exclusive rights. The tragedy sets in when this 'extremystically' conjured duality between divine and demonic gridlock is declared a match and/yet at the same time a misdemeanor and steep gradient of inequivalence; bad habits projected on someone somewhere specific so they are out where you can no sooner see than kill them, instead of a situation so perfectly polarized that you'd thing it can't fail to show singlesidedness, bias and be telltale for the fact that both are equally wrong and in need of constructive and unselfish solution, a third perpendicular (genderchange like) way for giving and for getting out of and turning corners toward fruitful co-operation; basic lessons of light and dark, electricity and magnetism are easily forgotten when you have to heave heavy equipment or bloodily holy parchments around.

A sense of justice propped up by biased take on history can nevertheless function and be taken as a prize, rank and title worth fighting over as easily as retaliation; both guarantee escalation though the beginning of battle is triggered and motivated by getting your own back and/or even. None of that matching is left over to be applied to the battle itself where no rules for fairness apply, not even a pretense is necessary. This is perhaps the true cost of Native American genocide. As far as I am concerned, that is the holocaust that has already finished us off. All of us.

David Victor Hanson recently played the wannabe Indian stealing their ancestorhonouring thunder for the very people that are in the process of such mixing and displacement that we don't even have to swarm into space anymore to become aliens.

The stalemate/trigger grandprize (a projection of the fleeting right to reproduce) is symptomatic of as well as may lead to ever more battles of and over minds taking refugee in digitarianisms as well as resorting to wielding it as a weapon (the epitome of collective crystalizers and collection collations [[dicktatoring fashions of bloodily holy bible-like bibliography fascistically if need be]] on the one hand and in the other corner pretty much aloof even, devil may care, pure collectedness [[bloodiyl holy Qurans and its claimed faultless code and flawless coherence]] characterizing the sterility and desertification of abstraction, generalization and hierarchy). It is responsible for exploiting military advantage with genocide and env. devastation as guaranteed and proven outcomes.

We thus completely deviate from pure animal matchings of strength (an equivalence nature abhors and cuts in half or altogether the closer it is and about as soon as it arises) by way of transposi*(tioni)*ng twice over; I mentioned the first one in the second alinea and the second one is an even bigger offence: we subvert, short circuit an evolutionary mechanism (that prevented or at least slowed and sorta punished too much collectivation inducive uniformity to arise) in that we double the diametrical opposed and disputed distri- and attribution of outcome and results back into causes; thieves of each others history in order to have a reason to steal their future also we assume the only way to claim being good is by winning a decisive battle.

The only just prebattle gridlock is all the easier to reach as the different factions (who can't show for the type of selfsufficiency the crowd around Bhagwan shree Rashneesh (Osho) was one of the last to reach for on a noticable scale [[in semi arid conditions I might add]] and failed to attain), are tempted (to exactly that degree) to accuse rivals (who need have no ties at all except to draw from the same but also inexhaustible sources such as the Quran) of being plants and props of the enemy.

011922 antheism research ---- > 011934.html (autoplectic) starts this train of thought for me: religion is more often a misguided substitu-, compensa-, sublima-, and surrogation for dust adoption and organization but here and there, very rarely (as on/in these pages) a pointing, running, getting and psyching, in hopes of finally being, up to it. By the same token all our longings for, searching hankering after and investing of authority (authoritativeness; being 'right', on target, a godly missive/missile hetcetera), are the equally misguided and failing manifestions of coherence, harmony and tradition (those making most who have least of such), the absence of autonomy and in the truest sense the mere symptom of as well as being such lack - - - -- - longest in thread: 011951.html (thornton)

new site discovery thanks to Mark Dery: lowculture.com/ SHALLOW: moving images, moving up and down; GRAVE: politics, polemics and punchlines - the site allows window narrowing (splitting down the middle to either of the very lightly tinted columns) so the (thus but narrowly narrowly escaped) 'glarity' don't get like an overly but only half as irritant pain in the eye. there was once a little rock that felt organizationarily challenged and became pensive about an organic solution/way to turn singularly prolific; let's evolve a man and see if he will look around sharp enough to know where he came from and what's good for him and start to feed soil and sealife with numerous tracefilled fresh dust, helpin out mama a bit; I saw some repros of extremely rare pornographic war prop. yesterday (boekwereld, no netpresence), a puzzle no less, speak of the devil and cryptic secretionary signs bedeviled by the mirror: blond gal with tommy helmet and the 'times' crumpled in one hand sees not herself but some sort of sisterly enough, also tommy helmeted and darkheaded gal laughing at her, holding up the 'Semit' reflecting the 'shell's' 'Times'

If you try to sing too high it won't sound good; if you try deify mankind rather than humanize rock you have a comparable problem.

Apropo Dan Winter's use of the term 'recursiveness', here's Tom Walker's employment of that concept (and to very good effect if you ask me):

> Autofellatio as entheogenic practice
> Autofellator Glenn Scheper conveys an aspect of autofellatio that is often lost in the spectacle of this ostentatious sexual practice but which nonetheless suggests a connection to the ancient cosmogenical myths involving autofellatio. Scheper discovered autofellatio as a 24 year old and attributes several years of psychotic disturbances to this find. In essence he posits that the practice brings the practitioner into a heightened awareness – a rapture-like state of consciousness – conducive to profound ontological insights. Autofellator Al Eingang explains some of the reason for this attained ability to «tweak» one's orgasm both for extended duration and increased intensity:
> > "Imagine having someone suck on your cock who knows exactly what you're feeling at every moment; who can adjust every variable instantly to provide you with maximum pleasure. Imagine [...] sucking on the cock of a man who knows exactly how hard and fast to push, and when to pull out [...] Having that much control means that I can have a variety of kinds of orgasms..." (Al Eingang)
>
> Scheper likens what happens to the phenomenon of infinite regress known in quantum mechanics as a strange loop or Von Neumann's catastrophe of the infinite regress where the mind loses its grip on the subject-object relationship and one finds oneself at once being receiver and giver of fellatio. This could be comparable to an experience of apotheosis which Scheper compares with the surmised initiatory states of consciousness attained by religious icons such as Enoch, Moses, Buddha and Jesus. The literature history is, according to Scheper, replete with esoteric references to this act. He gives for instance the following example from the Old Testament involving Moses:

> And the LORD said, Behold, [there is] a place by me, and thou shalt stand upon a rock: it shall come to pass, while my glory passeth by, that I will put thee in a clift of the rock, and will cover thee with my hand while I pass by: I will take away mine hand, and thou shalt see my back parts: but my face shall not be seen. (Exodus 33:21-23)

The exoteric significance of this section becomes very obvious when one sees the rock as Moses' skull; the glory as Moses' phallus, that also being his standing aspect. Scheper points out that for this metaphor (and other that he enumerates) to be recognized it is essential to realize that the classic autofellatio discovery position is inverted, "when body weight flexes one's neck to yield a sudden advantage. Thus upside-down" letter to a jailed animal activist who recommends reading Upton Sinclair's famous book about the inhumane beginnings of and offensive run up to present day bio-industrious evil in Chicagan slaughterhouses, posted at http://victoria.indymedia.org:

may I recommend a little reading material too?
I am the son of a man who did it all in the meat industry (born in the butchershop he slaved 16 hours a day in for 10 years before coming to own it in fact), and though he spoke with and to many he never employed all that many people, he'd rather risk lowering himself to and take the fall for them by way of staking a slowly growing capital entirely again and again.

I reacted against what I thought was an overly fanatic work ethic; his all too macho, fast (transit) man, patrist and erosion by overgrazing thus transience, migration and desertification prone industriousness. I searched for arguments to show up his ecology ignoring calculatedness which led to (transport) waste and suffering (not in the least place as the stress over great financial risks back in the times insurance hadn't penetrated to the field of human endeavor now known as frozen meat transport).

I went as far as being vegan, raw food fancier and all that, set up pretty schemes about raw rock dust raw tree food I forget what the rawness of information was

. .. I am back at eating meat at least once a day and the artisanship, the slowness of local food (a luxury we must work for so everybody attains it) applies to meat though I'd leave them fencelessly free to roam a lot more. This day and age borders are toughening up cause brains are more and starved and vacuous.

If they weren't we'd be taking hints from the likes of Mad-Cow and soil conditions (with regard to lack and/or toxicity of trace elements) expert Mark Purdey (are the Nobel prize awarders asleep?) or the late climate and fertility cycle intuitive and amateur scientist/engineer, rock-dust application advocate John Hamaker and slowly eliminate the need and use for long haul of anything but cheap minerals of the type that go a long and probably the only longest way in the figurative sense.

Fitting rock into the future by way of dust blowing into rain rather than wind would please me if not the gods.

/hyperstition4.htm 204K so. .. it was the derailment at central station amsterdam (talk about in your face construction work) on the front page but in the last few days there was a train on a small barge/float of the type they fill with 'bagger' (derogatory word for one of the once very finest substances in the whole wide world - slib, slop, river bottom; muck don't fare any better); it will pendel between central station and one of the 'islands' they have started to *(re)*colonize, it's called Java island. .. .trivial bla but as long as we have northanger on board I am not shy. .. .. .

in a library I saw a children's poster of the solar system and they had damn well 'peopled' it with all sorts of cartoon characters; space explorers are having entirely too much fun, just like erstwhile colonizers (partly degenerated to colontourist); don't let the worst of dutch venturesumness lead you astray yet again. Don't matter either way as long as America has us in inescapable tow.

My company Punchline Pioneering has taken out a very special patent on the large lump of . .. no not labor (that's a phallusee according to the sandwichman), on the levitatious lightfood (feed the light) languishing in most spaceless of spaces; pulling some space down to earth is the way to keep up with any goddamn demographic speed you care to choose and choose to care for.

If these counter currents (when choices aren't real[[ly .. . .]] choice) can be caused to cascade rather than clash and crash (permapleachalbe rock sprout sport anybody?) we'll soon swell with willful spillfoolproof pride to powder .. .Ho, I have said.

I will answer the challenge (questioning my posting a counterpunch article in response to your praise of Jared Diamond) here to save on 'drag'. ---- Am I correct you feel that site mentioned let alone praised here even is the sort of defilement in your book which mere casual and uncritical mention of the likes of VDHanson is in mine?

Proyect also is not an unmixed blessing (but that's another story; check my old files) and I am aware folks like Madsen get the likes of Doug Henwood upset when counterpunch repeats the offence of publishing him . . I gather his is a very (9/11) conspiracy theory oriented voice (driven by the racist theory that coloured people are too stupid to pull it off according to Dougers); but then again Henwood doesn't like Blankfort either whereas I think him essential to understand Chomsky's Zionism.

pol pot got a mention in a thread at a dutch blog with lines of conversation layed on so thick the scene borders on serial monologue; best take a look (nudity alert): http://www.peterbreedveld.com (Frontaal Naakt) - logo has naked knight with helmet and giant pen, the pictures used to be from the 20s but recently upgraded to presently living flesh.

anyway, I quoted Lance there and called George W Jeworge Doublejew all on the same day, my site was blocked to all comers the next.
In my printing sequels ('prfr' gone private) I recently printed the threads that touched the (Camb.) subject which ran on LBO only a few weeks ago and leafing through to forge a handwritten table of content (the chance that these one of kinds will cost a fortune someday is slim but I do stash them) I found the above -- 08.11.05 - 9:04 am | #

Define Impersonal: (from breathing space for nonanthropic to the threatening impersonality of mass industries, transits, rackets and such spaces), tragedy of the commons is tragedy of the gentle mores and lores; clean water, deep shade and personal touches trope trypist -- *(t)ripe t(r)ope t(r)*ypist: I dunno, it's just one of encyclopedestrian globaloid war critic Eric's little rants (coming thick lately) and until I've actually read it (delay after initial qualifying of sniff outs and finds entering print out process can be months .. and months sometimes) I hardly know for sure he sees solutions the way I do (but doubt it cause those who specialize in analysis to detail resolution as deep as him leave themselves little time for that, still, I wonder sometimes, I must have sent is site a few clicks back in the busy days).

Anyway, his is a sharp eye for war industriousness and domino effects of dominance or foolish pride flare ups leading to one after the other. I don't know a single science fiction author that was inspired by say Winter, Arguelles, me and other bioneering bravura (always in need of 'discovering' more to prevent depression) of like stripe.

ps: I last wrote: .. ...expansionism carriers died in hollow trees for god sake. ---- that should be 'dined', not 'died' and there's a famous painting that shows it: the-tree.org.uk/TreeTalk/PicturePages/RGriffing/griffing.htm

http://differenzmaschine.blogsome.com/36 Accounting Terror (talks about credit populism, a long piece I wouldn't be suprised to learn shows the ancient adage war is inflation is war is guerre inflatoire etcetera in al it's chessastions [[transliteral dutch]] well enough to make me proud and hopeful).

goro adachi is out of his gourd (no matter how much i admire people who love rivers, it's plain silly to make them mean everything possible and impossible); he's a bit like Szabo I am afraid, I caught the latter arguing with the man who's system you use (jacob's wheel) at his forum and saved it; quite hilarious and revealing I thought. (all these people are tied with literal fabulists like . . .. shit I don't even want to recall all them names yet again). Suffice it to say I think they are dead if not deadly ends. However I shall explore that composite site a little, if for nothing else, to find traces of Arguelles (should be in spain about now) and such.

ps: if you are anywhere near burlingame I can arrange for you to pick up the bag of sea minerals there by emailing my pal don weaver (it's about time for my once in 5 year respect payment anyway, which reminds me what a sorry frontfighterfigure I make [[the dutch call being ridiculous 'to beat a figure]]. Don't gigantic summation of early warning signs in climate change is available in pdf at remineralize.org)

Goro's site is top of the line as far as visual design (present version since may last year: goroadachi.com/etemenanki/archive-2004d.htm) but he is a scared little fish in the ecology of riverbending and river helping hand lending .. . he ain't helping establish a sensible way to worship the only true, namely earthy riches: bagger (aanbidding = worship; aanbod = supply; bied aan = offer; offer = sacrifice).

sd pens a great post

I wrote chessastions but meant chessations, an even better translation (for schakeringen) would be chesserations (tesselation and ration chases are obviously hopping hinterher closely).

About sd's question on surveillance: The word is that Rackspace simple responded to a request to hand over certain logfiles, not an order, so that makes the Indymedians regard this, their server hosts as whimps giving in to the populist meme 'totally legit, nothing to hide, be our guest' (which unfortunately not stimulated by way of exemplary practice on the part of doubly standardosed, strictly one way perps, pentagonians and ofFBeIers or something; see latest thing by Chuck Grimes an LBO-talk lister; via via link; also a confession to being here there).

below the beginning of one of the last serious attempts to get the global newswire on some sort of stable base; since then it went missing for long stretches of time, then even the whole archive went missing (and my 40 file series pointing to article ID rendered a lot less useful), a brief restart was made (apparantly by someone very familiar with the german indy software), then a much reduced (no more quick guaging of popularity to be gleened from glancing at the comment numbers items attract) and changed version (instead of items per page there were now 30something) appeared only to be gone again after little over a year later. And the list from which the sample thread below has been taken? It is still there alright, but has been visited only by spam for the last few years now.

I am still not done mourning the global indy*(main)*wire (despite all the spam and duplicate problems it had) .. .but .. .. perhaps this is all for the better really; if it foreshadows and prefigures the secessions on all sorts of 'tighten up to tidy up' fronts, as described in the article on corporatism at reclaimdemocracy.org . .. . .. fabulously difficult to do; how throw parasites off (overblown desert fundamentalism out of gentle and green regions) if certain forms of them are already deeply rooted? You just can't attack the quran and ignore what the bible wrought without practicing intorerable and partisan partiality. Islam's best defense is on grounds of (french) levelage, eq. treatment, non-discrimiation and ending affirmative this, favored that and subsidized other. Same rights for all or none. They could argue: You whities let the bible in so be fair and give us a chance too. Not that they haven't been given a chance to recreate the great hanging gardens of babylon at least in miniature (the dutch for instance, are famously stingy with land desired and indeed requested for such purposes).

Deport all quran toters and throw the bible after them including 'real' dutchmen who insist on holding on to that one of the 3 great evil wrighting books in this world? That would cause a lot of treeroot concrete cracking, perhaps not the least cheerful prospect.

http://archives.lists.indymedia.org/www- newswire/2002-February/003458.html Chuck Munson posts: [Www-newswire] Is IMC-Global beyond hope of saving?

hey, funny, after posting the above I amend as follows: They could argue: You whities let the bible in so be fair and give us a chance too.
Not that they haven't been given a chance to recreate the great hanging gardens of babylon at least in miniature (the dutch for instance, are famously stingy with land desired and indeed requested for such purposes)

next I go pick up the maxspeak.org (you listen!) item I mentioned yesterday and find a google ad (in dutch) trying to sell me an acre of israeli for 200.000 euri!!!!!! -- you can also view google ads by category maybe not that funny. neither is this: http://harpers.org/CartoonSheehan.html

BOTH SIDES NOW; author of the long comment I quoted at the beginning has meanwhile received the advice to seek help from female red in tooth and claw; and her account is certainly from the other side of 'the fence'; let me climb it and see what either side stems from. Pedigree profile: finery filter known as the flow of time: the times it takes for A: lava to cool, effluvia to precipitate and dust to be pressed hard and dry dwarfs B: the time it takes to grow millenia old organisms yet both happen at the same time and even the latter in turn miniaturize those it takes be consumed by flame or the time it takes to produce a little dust. If these are not a the most recursive, important and interesting one way cascades that make and/yet miss each other to ever get to know, besides the even longer term/scope like 'genesis continuous', I'd like to know which are..

Violence ('game' 'released') to Creative Commons you people are sicker than I can say and sicker than you know by a further and wider margin still; I can at least close that gap though I warn you from my position to that of an empow*(d)*ered speader of peace requires a few additional notches both on the comprehension and what to do with it front. That caveat out of the way, allow presentation of some creds: For those born in old fashioned butchershops (47 yago) blood holds little mystery to me (though the mutual desire to kill is familiar only in as far as I imagine ways to make fighting fair which I trust and fancy is part of gaming culture struggling with it’s dark, selfish and highly nonsocial self); I struggled free from familial (soft though traumatic enough) coercion (and its compulsively commercial drive to live for the dynastblast, the private regional and national sizes of messianism, no stranger to any fancier of offspring) and since then attempt showing others what mindsets and practices immunize and afford a choice when it comes to partaking in the categories of experiences one can call violent or not.

Going out killing some bad guys and having to always be on guard for them was for the longest time a great antidote against and pre-emption for the rise of the suffocating mass-society we find ourselves in but no more. It is gonna take a better distribution/understanding of discipline in order to improve the ratios between demographic prickroot (eco-footprint) and provision prowess if we opt for the gentlest possible way out/back.

If that sounds good to you so far, consider your self lucky; you (too may soon) find yourself spending hours at my sites, reading the works gathered by one out (of) a billion (a unique combo of talents, inclinations, troubles and times resulting in privileges gained from catering to urgent needs of the masses reapplied to serve them with a slight delay to study needs and requirements we are only dimly, cryptozoically or even totally UNaware of). Of course we all are one in a billion and I am much like most of them in that I don't get a billion visitors either (let alone paying ones) but it simply takes at least that many to outwit the randomization and erasure always going on.

In our world of worshipped and warshipped innovation we all hope to come up with a rare combo of stuff and thus contribute to the flow of our or others' blood, cash or whatever.

More importantly, how can we appreciate the extent of the present bipolarity and gulf in comprehension if we don't go to the edges? Or maybe it would be safer and more reassuring to ping pong backwards and forwards between the moral sanctuaries of Lenin's Tomb >K-Punk >The Guardian. If you've got any substantial points to make then please fire away. I'd love to see what a penetrating and extensive analysis of Palestine/Israel you have up your sleeve.

> PACmeter - Popularity, Authority, Credibility Online: How To Measure Them? ----

I go: hi, first I'd like to thank you for your work. Quite astounding you can keep up with all these puzzling (puzzlepushing) developments.

Most of it seems to fit the category I would circumscribe as 'work' which leaves us with less time to leave 'it' out fostering, due to and in growth conducive conditons when we are busy cutting it up and studying cleavage lines changes from differently angled, weighted and timed blows.

In other words the abstractive sterilizing mere mime and surrogative symbolizatory ritualization of the actually effective action (I had gotten tired of repeating this type of phrase and shied away from it for a long while but you bring it all back up).

Anyway, that's not (very obviously got much to do with) the reasons I decided to comment, which are:

I have owned/operated one of the oldest and most old fashioned types of blogs for years so consistently that google was following me very closely and bringing three to four hundred daily clicks (how many amongst those were robots or with what searchterms they came I never struggled through the ins and outs that seem to be your strengths, to find out) to my static (most bloglike) url alone (spinning off 2-3 160K files a month).

So, my question: was I a great source of revenue for my host Lycos? Why did their stats show 15 'visits' a week for years? Were they only counting clicks on their ads?

Why won't they answer enquiries about why they blocked my account and broke a promise made at the same time to allow 3 months worth of time for me to save my files????

----- hey I disrespecfully don't agree, 'pure' has zero to do with speech these days and everything with presently taboo and in any case fairly hidden principles of process; it's a dumb thing to say cause it implies that there might be pure speech and you may find your speech liberating but it isn't helping you escape your screen cloister than mine does me as far as I can see; pure speech is I bet, a fond figment of your imagination. You'd only have a point if the magic formula to validate gibberish as opinionated or even threatening was found but most fundamentalisms are symptoms of having painted oneself into a corner; their adherents don't venture out much. I think the question is how do we free speech and not be on the defensive with all this 'freedom of speech' stuff implying it's either up against all odds or even offensive.

boy ain't that a nice concise picpostcard inversion of hard truth; truth is techo memes undermine, damage, leech off of, are in principle and ultimately deadly to decent healthy enough to work hard ECO-operative capitalisms.

And students have fresh enough perceptions to be shocked at such sorry spectacles and dim prospects once they get their perceptions straight and see through the rampant schizoid flavour of the kind of fucked up info feeds clearly stemming from parents who had the stupidity to think it was a decent and possible enough thing to do, have children in a city and they grew and substituted for real adventure with sf

Students certainly don't all protest and polemicize as a subfunction of matey-feely type strategy.

excerpt from Nick's contribution with plenty of yesterday's edge left:

> There is thus a paradoxical proximity of Hobbesian political ideas to classical liberal ones, because neither idealize the role of government, but rather restrict themselves to explaining why and to what extent it should be tolerated. The idea that government is a channel through which positive freedoms (entitlements) might flourish is entirely alien to both.

hey allowing a dumb digitoy like the numbographer to put Pinker on a par with Deloria is high praise indeed. Of course since this is an explicitly language evolution dedicated topic it's easily more legit for you to do without Deloria than for me to ignore Pinker, right? I prefer care taken to not favor bias over balance, at least not to the exclusion of point, pick around in the crumbs falling off an I fear all too richly laden table and warn your paradoxical use of turf to jump off it for good, shoot it down in the process if necessary may seem expedient and inevitable but only cause you change language under beleaf into belief in language; the former don't allow abstract treatments to be taken seriously unless you like to loose all moring thanatoid zombie arcade like and be jailed by the shadow of your own symbols.

Tachi - I agree. Piet's presence here is completely baffling. I don't know why a) ... he bothers posting comments here, as he seems to dislike most of the lines of thought being explored here and has no real interest in any of the topics.
b) ... he is tolerated here in any shape or form. He has nothing productive to say, is entirely negative, can't think, communicates with nobody, seriously disrupts the flow and is an all round embarrassment to anyone trying to take this blog seriously.
Piet is a severe 'why do I bother?' factor. I find his comments so cringeworthy that I've seriously considered giving up contributing. However, it's been so engaging of late that I just keep getting sucked back in. Posted by: sd at October 8, 2005 09:05 PM

> tachi - think your point about the tangents zone is an important one in this context, evidently problems arise when people lack elementary agreement about what constitutes a 'response' to a comment or topic I'm probably being somewhat perverse about the issue, but the social management of a radically open space such as this is quite intriguing in its ownright, even serving as a microsocial laboratory of sorts - can't help taking some satisfaction from the fact we've managed to remain open when so many other blogs have abandoned the effort - question is, how much chaos and disorder are we willing to tolerate? answers clearly vary Posted by: nick at October 10, 2005 05:24 AM

2.3 more whinges after posting a link (dhushara.com/paradoxhtm/contents.htm text versions [[over a Meg]] and illustrated pdf) that has such a huge amount of clarity on sociobiology and the various flavours of language to offer is quite baffling but I am the proverbial pearl caster ain't I? Mustn't 'fall out of my role' (dutch one) must I? I too think I must just that though, set the swine free, turn 'm loose*.

halfway page 81-85 dhushara.com/paradox/homo.pdf (password: model) offers more relevant stuff on language than all the items I have ever read here altogether, just my humble opinion submitted to my peers here.

* = If we emptied all our prison's content as far as they hold Maroccan passports into busses and lobbed them across the fences in southern spain with notes attached saying 'give us your illegal subsaharan migrants in exchange for these non-integrants' (instead of turning em loose into warravaged and empty nomanslandstrips between borders that are closed to them) and (oh, by the way) here's a few society wreckers that can't seem to lose their native ways and get with the multicultural program, ergo, a much better fit (and perhaps saving face) for both of us.

the next hyperstition item is about flue epidemics; I go: A strong and fully functional immune system is impervious to viruses; the medical work of Julius Hensel, the reports of acresusa.com and all the other stuff you guys are in complete denial about but I go for big time have born that out for me.

neglect and moronic practice transfered into a threat is a bigger problem. Both converge to bring about, spontaneously generate problems, confining flocks for instance, to evade contact with infected and migrating siblings exposes them to (stressful) conditions that conjure epidemics in its own bio-industrial rites.

> Nick: threat-management capabilities [. ..] especially techno-scientific (e.g. medical) advances - are always unprecedented at the margin and their potential contribution thus escapes accurate calculation.

piet: in light of what I said before and with the same laws of reversal applied this reads: t-s advances dig in and entrench, even amidst growing wreckage, denying, prosecuting and imprisoning accurate calculation.

Trade relations really went awry after WW2 when the clearing principles failed to be reinstated, honoured and practiced according to Fekete. But in fact the states for instance lost formal and legal footholds for this old style co-operative capitalism in 1863.

So we now have an incontrollably credit (dependency) spewing disownment mechanism in place; eureka, we are a monopoly (like to work from the top down and can sprout from a single ill conceiving individual) and don’t need war to cause a business cycle of spasm and contraction anymore cause we can extend (inflationary) war time credit practices to interbelli, the second ww never stopped in this sense!!!!!!!! See Roy Davies site and his father’s work on this stark contrast reflecting the disparity between ‘defense’ capital and accountability.

The diffence between the crisp and crunchy scaled and distributed Bill of Goods Clearing systems of old and the present last resort for those too few and big to fail becomes a lasting imposition and is like heavy storms or eruption dust darkening the sky versus serving the worm his favorite food.

Which brings us to our food which has suffered a tremendous overal drop-off in protein content for field crops all through last century with some few selective exceptions. Add to that the deserts of concrete and bio-industrial conditions people allow themselves to be herded into and a recipe for disaster is complete.

Breakthrough for remineralization in California farming

posted by Don Weaver (R), 08.09.2005, 14:19

> I am happy to pass on a report to me from Dennis Curran of Summa Minerals, which has been focusing its rock dust marketing efforts toward some of the bigger farmers from Texas to California, at least. Dennis says that Grimmway Farms, the largest organic farm in California (and he thinks possibly the world), had ordered about 370 tons of the Summa rock dust in a recent 12 month period, using it on 20% of their organic acreage. They were impressed enough by the results that they have now committed 100% of their organic acreage to remineralization. They also have significant acreage which is not yet certified organic, but good sense and the knowledge of available regeneration methods and materials are likely to inspire them in that direction. One of their marketed brands are the "Bunny Luv" organic vegetables seen in most natural foodstores. If they are now demonstrating how to produce superior remineralized organic vegetables, perhaps organic and not-yet-organic farmers worldwide may learn from their example. Thanks to Dennis Curran of Summa Minerals (702-256-2990) in Nevada for keeping me informed of their progress.
> I recently spoke with Dennis Curran of Summa Minerals and he mentioned that Grimmway has by now ordered 768 tons of rock dust. This is exciting because Grimmway is utilizing soil remineralization as a highly successful way to transition from mainstream to a highly mineralized organic agriculture. It is likely that many other mainstream farmers will become aware of this path to sustainable agriculture through their example.

Subject: God is a Dick
This article sent by Bryan shows just how monotheism is tied to sexual chauvanism and the diabolization of woman. The fundamentalist belief of the author is made possible because the Biblical quotes which support it are violently sexually chauvinistic. These views are not extremist, but typical of the sexual trend of male dominion in monotheism.
But there is a deeper sexuality here. Men are described as having sex with and worshipping women in lieu of God. The ultimate implication is that the love of God is a phallic love and the Yahweh comes from a phallic cult. Remember Abraham's servant had to testify, hold the patriarch's testicles as an oath of faith. And God promised Abraham seed and told Moses to cut his dick. Monotheism and the love of God is thus sexually phallic - an alpha reproductive token

Ever seen a billboard with a picture of a beautiful gal wearing a pair of skin-tight, cut-off, blue-jean (really short) "short-shorts", a man's shirt with its sleeves cut off, tied at the waist, all buttons unbuttoned, work boots (with loosened laces) and a hardhat [cocked back on her head] on, leaning (sensually [her hips cocked to one side and body bent forward just enough to suggest "cleavage"]) up against a "jackhammer"? hyperstition blog: continuing from last issues posting (book [by Harvey] review from slash):

> Nick: piet - long (6:32) post on Harvey so full of nonsense it leaves me breathless. Primary problem, of course, is the underlying Marxoid theology - as if it is anything other than posturing to talk about 'overproduction crises' and suchlike today - even the left really know this, and rarely pretend to the slightest understanding of economics or other serious issues any more, preferring to concentrate on movie reviews, moral gesticulation and cooked-up psychobabble. If a remotely cogent contemporary Marxist theory were still possible, wouldn't someone have taken the trouble to put it together for us? Secondly, the notion of 'Bushevik' over-achievement and 'hyper-militarism' is hilarious. US military spending is close to a historical low (under 4% of GDP), Syria, Iran, and N. Korea are allowed to give Uncle sam the finger without obvious consequences (not to mention Pakistan, Saudi and other 'allies' who will obviously need taking down hard before WWIV is over). On the economic front, US government spending is undergoing an LBJ style welfarist boom, global free trade remains a pipe dream, business is strangled in red-tape, the Reagan/Thatcher 'turbo capitalist' vision has been quietly shelved, just look at the wish list of any market-oriented economist: it's huge and almost entirely unfulfilled.

free trade? are you a tooth fairy freak too? 'defense' budget? you mean the one that comes up with the kind of cold hard cash witch magically turns into a cornucopia .. .? . .. it's like the hole in the barrel theory with these never dying superduperstitions; a low level hole aborts build up to higher ones and since minerals in the soil is such a low and leaky level, looked down on if looked up and at at all we ain't sailin' nowhere soon for the higher freedoms no matter how much and long and wide and bit torrentially you may hawk the fucking fancifullness, thinking it won't hurt to skip a full stages and/or exploit the comparative advantage whereas all that would be required is investigating which traces are causing the toxicity or deficiency factors and remedying them. This is the only route toward localizing intimacy instead of routing it into tv, onto internet and fucking killing it monstrously by commiting horrible offenses on the feminine bits of life in the process .. .with any luck another baron will swing, stride, jump and straddle from italy to spain on treelimbs without having to touch ground in oh. .. say .. .another year or thousand.

I'm most interested in the idea that real value is found not in what we have in common, but in what makes us different. I like his discussions around being bound to someone - or something - that offers us no truth. Like Nancy, Lingis focusses on death or finitude as an integral part of being-together, as something we have in common despite all our differences.

The dwelling spaces are actually hollow pods supported by branches, and connected by hollow boughs; the Iszic don't live inside tree-trunks.
> ...[There were] houses with buttressed pods for the high-gravity worlds of Cleo 8 and Martinon's Fort, and loose complex houses with pods like balloons for Fei, where gravity was only half that of Iszm. There were trees comprised of a central columnar trunk and four vast leaves, arching out and over to the ground to form four domed halls illuminated by the pale green transmitted light.

http://gospel-culture.org.uk/visser_'t_hooft.htm article about the confrontation christianity/neopaganism ------

This was, of course, due to the fact that in the ancient pagan world Eros had been the object of worship, and the nature of eros-love was essentially different from the nature of agape-love, the love characteristic of the Christian life. Now in our day, Eros takes its revenge. Eros refuses to be ignored any longer. Some declare that the time has come to combine religion and eroticism, since "both have the same aim: They want to change man and seek his re-birth" (Walter Schubart).

http://translate.google.com/translate?..olf4.de/2-5.htm.. Appears still today important to me, what before 50 years for this and over the mental relationship of the sexes wrote walter kind of thrust to each other:

The woman rests more near on the source center of the life, for which man hunts the edges of the existence off, always anxious, to overcome it and means in last logic to kill it. The woman is with the principle of the eternal life, the man with the principle of death in the secret federation. The woman wants to embrace and in looping reconcile the contrasts of the world. The man against it solves the tension between contrasts, by he the one side, which destroys him unpleasant. It looks for the solution not in love and reconciliation, but in overcoming and destruction. It does not have a martial, erotische kind. The male principle, from the sort born, perpetuates the sort, seeks for itself to be, disturbs the life in the whole one. Its nature is fight and self-interest, its life will goes on statement of the own or on overwhelming a strange person, until in it the motive for release catches fire... The woman with its receiving plant is with the world reason united and in the agreement. The man however wants to change the world, further, overcome... 79

seaagri.com SeaAgri, inc. is excited to offer SEA-90, a unique soil fertility and remineralization enhancement that is not new but as ancient as our seas. SEA-90 is a full-spectrum mineral fertilizer that delivers 90 plus elements present in the sea's natural and ideal ratios. Soil stewards of the world can now replenish major minerals, micro nutrients and trace elements needed for microorganisms, plants, animals, and humans to sustain optimum biological life. SEA-90 is Dr. Maynard Murray's amazing sea solids proven effective during 30 years of research and trials. ----- SEA-90 is 100 percent natural, water-soluble, non-synthetic, unrefined mined sea minerals approved for Certified organic food production under the USDA National Organic Program. -------- SEA-90 is suitable and safe for every type of soil, growing system (farm, garden, hydroponics, aquaponics), crop (vegetables, grains, pasture grasses, grapes, small fruits, tree fruits, nuts), and aquaculture. -------- SEA-90 sea mineral enriched soils produce plants that mature earlier with increased yield, enhanced taste, greater shelf life, contain higher nutrient density, and exhibit improved insect, disease, and drought resistance. ------- SEA-90 sea mineral enriched soil grows pasture and feed that is definitively preferred by all farm animals over that which is conventionally grown. These same animals mature earlier, are heavier and stronger per pound of feed, and exhibit fewer defects. ------ Most revealing of all: Dr. Murray found that lab mice genetically programmed by inbreeding to die of breast cancer---when given feed grown in sea mineral enhanced soil---showed a better than significant reduction in death caused by breast cancer, produced ten rather than the normal two litters. Definitive examination of the tissue discovered no breast cancer, and of the offspring, none died of breast cancer!

the original location seems to be digitalvisionmedia.com a Nashville company which credits 'compadre records' (for which they must not have made a site since they don't hyper the name .. . unless they are withholding it till they get paid with more than 3 lousy songs - 3rd one called 'good ol usa' by someone else) they repo*(w)*ed in lieu of money? Do I care to try verify these wild and loose fears in the digital ditches around Nashville (the country side around which I once ripped around in a real hot rod for a few miles)? .. . Least I could do is google for compadre: compadrerecords.com see, I was only imagining things again. There's quicktime footage showing James doing stuff off his 60 Acres album) here's something you won't find yourself in agreement with but for those who are more of my purse suasion right click save as and disseminate /sing along far and wide, loud and clear.

The song (we can't make it here anymore) is absolutely in the spirit of Charles Walters - editor of the organic ag rag that changed my life*. It's economic and other analyses sketch the diabolically impersonal, death dealing, postmodern slavery sanctioning traps we have wriggled ourselves into which contrast astounding amounts with the reports from eco-farms which survive and make it, make it real and really make it. Even manage to thicken their *(soil)*bank savings account, Family businesses that make all round decent livings and lives aroun them decent.

ps: Sorry to have wasted your time once again Nick.

Some people say media concentration could be replaced if content creators quit working for these corporations, and instead, use text and video blogs. Blogs would generally be ignored except those who bubble up to the top of reputation rankings.
> Reputation would be based on reliable signatures, within a purely technical, unbiased infrastructure encompassing things like your subject interests, references from people you know and trust, and from the author's peers, and your content filtering and indexing systems.

A 5 page thread started on the 13th of jan 2003 seems to have died late last year and is called 'start your own money system';

> Pokchop says: So far, what I've gotten from Todd Boyle's website is that people ought to know what property they have, and ought not to lie when doing a trade with another, but often don't follow either recommendation. There are some interesting sounding ideas for accounting software, and some sort of PDA device with good security that doesn't have to route through Cisco main servers. These apparently will do business through promissary notes, apparently for US fiat money. (Maybe for goods or services.) But all US fiat money is are promises for more promissary notes, made "good" by laws requiring people to accept them in exchange, like it or not. Apparently, these devices could verify whether there was actually money to back up the notes at the time of the exchange, certainly an excellent idea, but it seems stuck on the same old, bad money. Gold, gems and tobacco are still sounding good to me. ---

Why Cary Tennis wears an asshat
he provides individualist solutions for structural problems. So, according to you there's no such thing as 'structural respect for individualism'?
Right left, man woman, indi coll aim backdrop electricity magnetism .. . . why don't we look at the evolution of this dynamic to establish sequence harmony place and time for evrything.

Individualisms and collectives come in each come in irreconcilable degrees, even on their own half/side of the equation. Any and every one of them condemned prosecuted and suppressed is likelier to show nastier 'form'. The (scalable, upgradable) trick seems to be voluntarization.

Institutions (whether dealing in luxury goods or basics) not carried by illustrative charisma that puts and refreshes the face of and on them phases out and dies. The bigger the indivual (seems/shines / is given credit) the better the capacity to crystallize a collective Much of the western sense of calming and productive routine being based on arms industry and banning of violence beyond the periphery is bankrupt due to the multiculturalisms a lefty no border policy has wrought taking cues and clues from golden glorydays turned to glare and gore with the taint of slavery. The place where paradoxically keeping up appearances of a definite front knows the most pervasive violence: Israel. Even paradoxes can't seem to consistently manifest in tension easing manners that have the opposite effects of downtime.

At another item I posted last issue's passage that starts: "The song (we can't make it here anymore) is absolutely in the spirit of Charles Walters . . ."

> # October 21st, 2005 at 1:41 pm -- pulpculture Says:

and at another item she whips out a simissile from her glossary (comparing me to the 'dead man on a stick' crowd); I go: hey, don't knock the stick, it just mightamusta been the (heavily heavily crypted art of the state) stand*(ard)* in stunthingy for his real secret we ape on: the compost turning device that keeps father's house of the many womanly mansions smelling like roses .. .

just thinking .. . . the more individualism 'arises' and gets hitched up with high hopes and overblown status the more we/one can take it as symptomatic of widespread bad routines in more and more desperate need of someone who stands out and is mimickable and amicable.

Good routine/choreography of any given pop will make them too happy to strain their necks for signs of making good escape guidance, individualism will be as cheap as air, no premium, no hype.

> .. . Lower-income majority candidates prefer less diversity, and they support admissions rules that partially ignore academic qualifications. Data from a CBS/New York Times opinion poll confirm these predictions. This model suggests why recently, several American universities have replaced race-conscious admissions policies with race-blind policies that de-emphasize standardized tests, with little or no effect on diversity. Income inequality and competitive admissions both make banning affirmative action more likely. (Contains 21 references.) (SM)

I suppose one can be forgiven to take this to strictly refer to economics since "Lower-income majority candidates prefer less diversity ..." (in height of income, those who choose such levels want the gradient to rise less steeply and hope to convert luxury [yacht] industries and slowly starve the reasoning for maintainance of large armies to fight supposed threats they thus themselves constitute etcetera) .. .. however, the abstract starts out thus:

> "This paper explains people's preferences for ethnic and racial diversity in higher education through a model based on self-interest. Although all citizens from the majority group value diversity and their own education in the same way, their preferences for the level of diversity as well as the means of achieving it depend on their competitive positions in university admissions. High-income majority citizens, who tend to have better academic qualifications than lower-income majority candidates, prefer more diversity, which they want to achieve through affirmative action."

> TOKYO — Murata Manufacturing Co., Ltd. has demonstrated a bicycling robot designed to showcase the electronic component manufacturer's sensor technologies at next week's CEATEC Japan 2005 show. CEATEC, Japan's largest electronics show runs from Oct. 4-8 in Makuhari.
> Tentatively named Murata Boy, the system is an integrated machine that looks like a bicycle with a humanoid robot rider. The 50-cm-high, 5-kg robot hits speeds of up 60 cm per second. The robot can also balance on two wheels while stationary using sensors.
> Receiving commands from a PC via wireless LAN, it moves forward and backward, stops and starts.
> Murata demonstrated the robot's balance control by running it on a 2-cm-wide balance beam.
> Murata said it developed the robot to highlight its sensors and other products that can be used in robot designs. Murata Boy is equipped with four types of sensors: two gyro sensors used to detect angular velocity and inclination; an ultrasonic sensor to detect obstacles; and a shock sensor to detect rough surfaces.

The robot has an internal sensor that knows its own body's angle. When it starts to fall to one side, its robot brain directs the arms to move the steering wheel to stay upright. When it comes to a stop, a spinning disk in its midsection keeps it from falling over. The robot is controlled with a PC via Wi-Fi.

Conclusion

> Doctor Masahiro Mori’s uncanny valley and its environs are fascinating terrain, offering an elegant and captivating explanation for the foundations of human ideals of beauty and ugliness. Their implications for the author, filmmaker, and artist reach far beyond the original focus of industrial design, yet include it as well, and they provide all manner of creators with signposts, aiding in the effort to achieve just the right impression for a character and to avoid missteps that could put off an audience. Last of all, others might find it just as useful, opening still more doors on as yet unknowable possibilities.

I suspect that, much as the continued existence of the "democratic" right to protest has more to do with the relative great cue!!

hilarious stuff on scape goating at googlewhack.com
I'll pitch in a soon to be shortlived one to get u started there: 'lonely websitebuilder' .. . unless they don't allow this a a two term/word expression

website builder as 2: 1.670.000
websitebuilder as 1: 39.800

here's a narrower margin, almost a tie:
site builder: 2.630.000
sitebuilder: 2.100.000
probably cause they are both considered wrong and disqualified, at least till they tally up more common usage.

web designer: 10.300.000
webdesigner: 2.000.000

certainly no wonder the gap widens when trying to equate not just separation by space but by state (known to toe the line increasing amounts of digits behind the comma):

stateterrorims: 518
state terrorism: 456.000
terrorism: 127.000.000

it would be fun to do this last one in different languages

> Ah, Eurolibs . This is like shooting fish in a barrel. Well, here goes...
> > But Germany is gradually becoming a bazaar economy in a different > sense, because nowadays it specializes in packaging and selling its products
> Nonsense. It also specializes in designing and inventing products. Infineon, STM, Daimler and SAP are world-class companies, at the forefronts of their tech and markets. Munich, where Sinn is based, is crawling with high tech firms.
> > To assess whether excessive specialization has occurred in Germany, we must focus on the labor market, for it is here that the effect of specialization is most visible.
> Labor market changes are slow and messy, and occur over time, not like stock prices or FDI. German labor markets are still suffering from the demolition of eastern Germany's industrial base from 1990-1994.
> > In fact, since the fall of communism, the percentage decline in > German industrial employment has been larger than in any other OECD country.
> An artifact of the collapse of the East, where 40% of the workforce officially worked in industry.
> > To remain price competitive, they have had to rely on imported components.
> The evidence for this is very thin. Most imports are coming from other industrialized countries, or relatively high-wage, high-skill places like the Czech Republic.
> > The manufacture of electrical products, such as chips and passive > devices, has quite often been shifted completely to Asia, while > even automobiles that are still assembled in Germany rely heavily > on components produced in Eastern Europe.
> Those aren't exactly low-wage sweatshops. They're highly industrialized members of the EU, with topnotch infrastructure, educational systems, etc. Design and R & D still takes place at home.
> > At bottom, the coincidence of unemployment and booming exports can be explained by the high and rigid wages from which Germany still suffers.
> You have to love the capitalist mindset. In a boom? Oh, those pesky wages are holding back growth. Slash 'em! In a bust? Obviously the fault of those no-account, shiftless proles, sitting around and drinking beer all day. Not like expensive economists with secure service jobs who've never worked a day in their lives...
> > Excessive wages destroy the labor-intensive upstream product stages too fast and also impairs other labor-intensive sectors like textiles, simple services, tourism, and construction.
> Since when is tourism a simple service? Museums, galleries, boutiques, advanced transport systems -- all pretty high-tech. More to the point, Germany can afford high wages, because it also has some of the highest productivity levels in the world.
> > But, while these sectors therefore grow especially fast, their high capital intensity means that they cannot fully employ the released labor, with the result that some of the unemployed workers have nowhere to turn but the welfare state.
> Switzerland does it. Japan does it. Germany did it for most of the post-WW II period, before it fell under the spell of Euromonetarism.
> > At the same time, since returns to capital are kept low by high wages, very little investment occurs.
> Germany has traditionally had higher rates of investment than the US, despite those higher wages. Japan: high rates of investment, low returns to capital. Which is more important - a functioning industrial base, or fatcat rentiers? -- DRR that's why I routinely save them, I can stomach yours fine too thanks.

.. and herewith/therefore suggest we should just 'plemp' the other tangent 'vol' with currentsee rambles (only 5 right now) since this one is gonna cost our sweet abstractdynamicizers exponentially more money as we append more (the law of diminishing returns rules in digitalia after all).

this week the largest dutch blog had a 1000 comment item!!!! (moronic one liners [[by fast car and laughs at a new sucker everyday's expense]] but more and more staggering to 'serve' nevertheless) crawling inside a rock is even more fun; definitely not to be attempted abroad, nor without proper embeddiment.

Once mastered however all the lands and glands (notice the brilliantly non-sexist use of the letter d there) WILL rejoice and a slaphappy time did indeed . .. so light*(en)* one up to day and again, remember, don't butt in headfirst, use it beforehand and congrats, if you read this far, you already are!!!!!! Nothing can take as much foreplay and show as much afterglow as gran rock fellas females and less familiars; tell you what .. ..teach a few monkeys and elephants this trick; design some of that pumpy stuff you all call .. eh .. gym ... .press .. ..ain't that the term. well, ... fuck . .. don't stop there; more to life than a shortcut bombast mating noise intented to charm and mesmerize possible mates.
How bout learning to distinguish between sound made in permaculture compliant ways (pleasurable byproduct of such practice on the one hand and all the others that are not .. rock grinding and it's outgrowth, reverb of it's 'preherb'). Fresh mud spraying has my preferred range of 'audelight' but a fool knows fireworks and electronic audiosmog doesn't do much except for those who choose to fall for such fakery, charming snakery and damage.

complementarycurrency.org/gallery.php beautiful!! . .. but where is the rockdust pile????? .. and you guys and gals over here, I thought y'all were into countin accountin akintone, a kintin where it counts? You haven't got a clue about the difference and our place between in- and organic time lines andl lineage do you??? Despite me posting myself dizzy for years now. Take privatization all the way. Look at it as a form of secession. .. we need to get away from private terrorism feeding state terrorism by turning to an all the way kind of privatization, one that secedes and autonomizes to institute and plant small scale pleasantry trees. .. the press must have the right of way formerly reserved for commando forces in crises and not be bashful about causing one when they find their routine unobtrusive air out of good news need/feed blocked in some way. Yes, make the army serve the press. And that's just one of the few things to turn around.

I wrote about dictatorial pounce vs coalition strategies as described in review of Frans de Waal's latest. Looking at butch policies with high 'make it on your own', individualistic freedom and low social safety netting factors vs the feminine ones with reversed emphases we see the former able to recruit (creepily cajole and jar the door make the poor feel a draft) and herd those really hurtin into war preparation. A good illustration is penned by LBO lister Jenny in the course of a draft thread: .. I'll post it in the tangents next door

A parasite was too well established for christians, leaning the arab way on the whole, to resist succesfully; it all comes down from topuppers and up from lowdoers like the flat star of beth did lay him (ever seen that site aloha.net/~john Webb or Webber); I never got a clear answer asking if his claim the constellation occured only once in 40 miljun years would be more frequent if you allowed planets to substitute each other and vary the star's orientation. Do you know?

Personally I think financial hierarchy just fine but the driving force, the loco- and emotion needs to stack from the bottom up and ridicule must be showered upon all who pretend (outright ownership or preferred customer status or whateva of all that twinkly brinkly sparkle transport) leverage up high, lest they become a public nuisance and soon after allround catastrophists.

The snopes article (The Claus That Refreshes) is incomplete to say the least; in the early nineties I went to a reading at the american book discount store in A'dam, one of the few I did see the inside of, on a weekly basis even, as indigine oriented literature got pushed out by aliens and cheapened to where I considered them 'snaepchen'.

after the : you decribe the noble savage and deny validity of the blank slate belief. If the Enlightenment indeed put an unqualified 'and' between the two it would be as wrong as you taking holding it both up and doing the proverbial washed baby chuck.

Your Orc story reminds me of the 'when santa was a shaman' story also. Usurpation and subjugation of the legit representation by the absent lord (black peter 'geknecht' by the bishop) who rules by vicious sally and after effects thereof until fresh atrocity time.

portland item (330949) called 'why america won't rise up' --- I go: governing bodies (from mayor to president) have no qualms about using police forces (strenghts of which grew past the critical point thanks to reactionary not non-violent, not massive and not radical enough objectionism) to stop irate crowds chucking them out on their ass, having lost a sense of shame and contact with commoners (a bad bad but necessary and inevitable side effect of upscaling to more massive, more equitable and greater distributism - disperse concentrations, decentralize ways and means for control).

Take that graph a few comments back for instance, seems like the race for great unity is on right? Massive support on the way there can only be mobilized to the extent systems and systemics become more communicative, mind the little ones *(diversification)*and achieve transparancy (cia finally meets its match).

176299 Marco on Roberta Blackgoat; I add a response to an uncomprehending previous commenter: if you can't grasp what marco might mean I recommend starting some books by Barbara Kingsolver; that might get you a lot closer to the 'remotenesses' you are coming from. And I could mention Louise Eldrich so you certainly won't come up empty handed if you are close enough to a library even if you can't surf marco's site. -------- > closer to the 'remotenesses' - piet wtf? s.pam? really? "closer to the 'remotenesses' you are coming from?" so am i coming from the remotenessess or going closer to it? wtf once more? "remotenesses"? haha since we aren't using complete sentences or even real words, i hope you won't mind my lack of capitalization. haha, get it? "capitalization"? no, you don't. there's nothing to get. this has really gone all to hell now. certainly not news, but we've already passed that milestone, so... no worries. really, the original post is already incomprehensible and if you can "grasp what marco might mean" then i would recommend some books by Edgar Cayce or maybe Madame Cleo, 'cause you're fucking psychic. Haha ;-] although you know, as well as i, if marco were not running with the 'in-crowd,' responsible for keeping the wire clean, the original post would be hidden as spam. seriously, i appreciate the references and i know you weren't trying to condescend, but i've actually traveled the world questing for indigenous people's rights and i'd be more capable than many at deciphering and accepting this content even without your help. the point is, it's unintelligible especially to the neophyte reader and hardly a news item. in fact, not even complete sentences. abuse of the wire can go both ways and selective editing policies really perturb me. I see dedicated readers lambasting right-wing spammers or the infamous http://go.to/bushsucks links. then, something like this comes along, it's defended, and I think it could make indymedia look hypocritical. i do, however, apologize if that perturbs you. it's great though, that we're both allowed our opinions and a forum in which to make such comments. even when it does get silly. ------------ Your Polemics Defile A Memorial - marco - 83 year old Roberta Blackgoat died April 23, 2002. Doug Henwood has a double faced dubiously pronged comment:

> He's a little dishonest when he says: Even a bond trader is a long way from a cog in the Nazi death machine. And he's a little disturbing when he declares the WTC a "legitimate military target": It is not disputed that the Pentagon was a military target, ---- If he's turning the standards of the Pentagon against the U.S., then he's adopting the morality of the imperialists, no? Doug

--- it all depends how bound for and up with violence 'trade' donit? ---- here's Yoshie's answer:

> Imperialists are more shameless than Ward Churchill, so Churchill failed to adopt their morality to the fullest extent. If Saddam Hussein had built a Trade Center and set up an intelligence agency office in it, and if Washington had bombed it, the US power elite -- including the US corporate media -- would have said, "It's Saddam's fault! He used Iraqi businessmen as human shields! Trying to make us look bad!" More to the point, though, Churchill is raising a question: "If the U.S. public is prepared to accept these 'standards' when they are routinely applied to other people, they should be not be surprised when the same standards are applied to them" ("A Campaign of Fabrications and Gross Distortions,' counterpunch.org/churchill02032005.html, February 3, 2005). If we believe that no one from other countries would ever kill or maim us using the same logic that Washington had to kill and maim their countrymen and -women, we falsely romanticize them, i.e., thinking that they are inherently morally superior to Americans and never hunger for bloody vengeance. Churchill, for all his hyperbolic rhetoric that egregiously failed to take contradiction between the ruling and working classes of the United States into account, didn't go so far as to say that Americans should be wiped off the earth (though some Americans have actually said gleefully that Afghans, Iraqis, and other official enemies of America should be) in his infamous essay. What, then, did Churchill desire Americans to do?

Instead, he expected Washington to go on a new crusade -- with the approval of the majority of the American public. As far as the war on Afghanistan was concerned, Americans didn't disappoint Churchill's cynical expectations, measured by the opinion polls taken at that time. Since then, Americans have behaved better than Churchill said they would, but it is also true that their opposition has failed to roll back US imperialism and attacks on civil liberties, just as Churchill said such domestic oppositions in the past have largely failed. Both the Republican and Democratic presidential candidates in 2004 said that they advocated "staying the course" on Iraq. George W. Bush, a really big Eichmann, got reelected in 2004 with a far larger margin than in 2000. Ward is no Martyr, no real matter, really of no consequence! What have you done? --- AIM-Ogitchida, 11.02.2005 04:49

Some Indians Smack Back!
Some white's start to call Ward Churchill martyr?
Now I know you arm chair revolutionaries are on crack!!

It's certain. ......further down Black Hills AIMer OGIT goes: "How about Vernon Bellecourt who did 18 months for refusing to testify to a federal grand jury about activists good will trips to Libya? Doesn't meet the bar? Oh that's right he doesn't like Churchill for pretending to be Indian. You won't talk or respect anyone who doesn't agree with your "martyr"."

postscript: the quote above was read after I wrote the comment below (yeah, a little impulsive I know); it alleges 'facts' to have been opposite to the co aim file called 'why' which I had taken a quick glance at ('why' [link in the ward file someplace, to which links at the top] makes Vernon one of the activist himself which if so, leaves him out of range, under cover [the special NA talent in real life but dishonourable when pushing symbols in this day and age]and deviously unnamed; I wonder if the plural is accurate according to their papers or a ploy to get brownie (reddie?) points for tacit admission of possesing a personality that is limber enough to do the splits). Is Vernon rahter than Ward the FBI snitch? .. . let's just hope neither really are ------------- hi ho hitler by piet prodelv ---- what was that about Bellecourt and lybia again??? --- Who cares, it's not blood, it's training, routine, activity, intention etcetera as well, a nonpartitionalbe indivisible package deal and as above so below, some gang up on others nevertheless or should I assert that each of the others are (by themselves even) more decisively important than lineage ties? That would be like saying women are more precious than men and all social animals tend to do their best when it comes to suppressing such praise and runaway appetite, love, usury whatever you wanna call our prowess when it comes to success; miniaturization is the obvious sleight of hand she uses and the foreboding intuition (aided by glances at Japan) would have perhaps reinforced the projections with little people in it that came to be known as fairy tales, so lets turn our attention to what each people must do to keep out of other people's hair and yet keeps individual from each of them free to contact and integrate parts or wholes of any and all others. Money can strike the perfect balance between individual and society, strike is the operative word here, the one that bridges the move and moves the 'donkey bridge' out of your head and into a task in and at hand cause money is a mere model for minerals in circulation, buoyed, mobile and driven by cont*(r)*act, organized, animated by the pure intent of openingly sharing.

Of course let there be no doubt I feel both sides (Ward et al vs carolmoore.net/sfm/arguments.html Carol Moore et al including Andrew Lehman, for that matter lots closer to the real obstacles) miss the point, scenario, prospects, perspective and even if they are only in mock play and as remote as the interspersals to otherwise dull and certainly dreadful accounts (the hopeful gracenote pointing to more than symbolic rubs and sprinkles, the anytime anywhere even if it looks like the hardly a prayer in hell situation), rubbing some rocks together and thinking of how generations of creatures from worm songbird to perhaps some that can commemorate you for such a king act is a reward in itself. . .. . .I guess what I should really do is shut up and move out of the firing line since realistically speaking, authoritatarian circumstances that dominate at and in any contested situation will make my favorite topic and fancy the last thing anybody for position there would have time for and patience with, it is by nature an act that can be bourne out, a subject that can be productively dissolved, a hallucination that can be thrillingly enjoyed best, even only perhaps, in the lap of luxury. I should stop being guilty about that and go for it instead. Fuck you all. I'll make a quantum leap away from my dad, a man of impeccable lineage, all his forefathers were butchers but striking a rock is more fun, less bloody and makes the exchange rates between hope against the pervasive and hideously expensive ailments of the aeons turn around in our favour.

ward churchill (tag) at technorati; only 11 posts at 6 blogs right now -- . .. . WHAAAAAT?????? -- One of them is a crusadering righty who has a humongous blogroll but almost no referal links to this item (all 12 of them via the tag link) though technorati says it receives 410 links from 326 sources (this is one of them, it has to resort to a double row blogroll even). - I am getting more than a little suspicious about in your face reciprocal linking tactics (already was thanks to corante.com/many anyway; my own flavor of up frontness regarding links is more literal, only via the front door do you find my permanent lists [which reminds me, I haven't even made the 2004 one yet], not in the blog; just threw the 4 permanent ones out in januari); it feels like these cheats are commodity blogging; harvesting and sowing industrially packaged collectivist schtick they call 'free alliances' (or progressive ones for that matter), it is as remote*(, absentee, distant, globalized, lazy and cowardly superior flashcapitalistic)* as wholesale and globally hiding behind the big guns of socialism: impersonal, impartial, principled yet no less supposed numerical (look no further than amongst yourselves and presto, absolute majority, including greatest good rhetoric) can get and/or ever was. Sure, as long as they get away with herding their lamblike into the molds, coercing as unnoticably as possible with the 'for your own good' rhetoric and as long as the mold stays as forceful as possible 'no matter what the cost' as they themselves admit (turning the ancient truth that truly principled is far from and anything but costly on it's head and inside out in the most painful way possible).

------:: :: + :: ::------ It's an unproductive (black and white, merely binary, 'if not for then against US') type of polarization that leaves no opting out alternatives, no way of not feeding either side, and thus both, of these equally compelling 'choices'. True, polarizations raise potential, cause focus, increase charge and alright but that's all the more reason to be very careful when recommending types of actions that will tap into and dissipate this differential reservoir .. . Given that Ward may very well have read my, about to be sorta repeated, earlier comments on his pathologizing of 'pacivility' (around the time his book on this subject came out) sincel lately other people are finding my mirror of a Bob Black on Ward Churchill file left and right - it could be said that on this FRONT, Ward's argument remain defiant, nay worse, mocking; check his little comment on the supposed absurdity of 'advocating volcanism' which is in a way exactly what I do do and prefer not to have put down as absurd and crazy; targeting wide swaths of landscape with fresh*(ly recycled and subtly charged)* minerals is the (furthest from affronting) FRONT that could draw the valiants away from the war one once it's vital need as well as perks bennies and all round future musicality are documented and presentable (my decadelong multidisciplinary efforts of doing so [[digitally]] has obviously not made a dent yet); so, as if ever there was, let there be no mistake about my active and exertious support for a less explosive more proportionally dosed but a nevertheless very recognizable volcano mime and mimick - not that there has been.

pirateballerina.com/blog/entry.php?id=36 I go: apologize for the insufficiently proofread comment above but the point I tried to make earlier today is worth elaborating on. : : : : : : Plagiarims is, unless your living is on the line, ------1} a form of flattery, ------2} just about impossible anymore these days when your work is within google's grasp cause it will bring all instances up : : : : : : You all are up in arms about attribution (US 'valiance' comes across to many of your supposed benefactors as being bellicose up front, up in arms period. Where reasons given, wrong ones and even when right, still lacking pre-engagement, last resort, pre-ultimatum-end alternatives. I'll try get more specific). : : : : : I have sizeable accounts of a case I witnessed up close and which went through the US court online. ------- ------ In Ward's case it is not mere more or less artfully modeling some principle that is at stake but genocide and facing the internalized and at the same time projected burdens of history.

> : : : :: : Now, often, a story needs to be told but the victims are unable to speak out, up and about anything anymore, which makes the case somebody still alive does all the more urgent.

: : : :: : When it comes to length, honour and loyalty to the lines and lineage one defends, gives credit and professes allegiance to, Ward comes out aeons ahead of you guys. You don't honour nothing of the precipitously displaced traditions about the continent you live on, exploit, poison and subject to life's very soul harming mono this that and the other, much less do you respect (or even see, since you do not see, you notsee nutsy Nazi) the ones you visit the same fate upon whenever a harvest of ballsy boys can be managed to make their way there after not so much thoroughly as anticipatorily faking yells such as kill kill kill (go listen to the Pete Seeger if you don't believe me) during 'training'. On top of that comes the comparison between respective lines and lineages themselves; those of western finance as carrot kindled expansion fueled by a demographic doctrine that was uncubated under rapidly desertifying conditions and escaped such only to recreate them elsewhere vs more sustainable and modest villagility (hey, good word that!). You can't outrun a psychultural burden and will only endanger the neighbours. : : : : : by the way, this item acts all outraged over the vaguest similarity between the experiences of separate soldiers as expressed in books they happen to both contribute to. It seems like excellently Joycean farce until you remind yourself these guys are seriously considering somewhat alike sounding sentiments as grounds for legal action!! On the other hand they want everybody to express one single feeling about the US foremost and fondly: it is the greatest thing since the pangaia break up. All the clever detectivisms laying bare and linearizing the convolutions and mix ups of shady, real and invented characters (that in reality stand in for a host of muted, mutilated, incapacitated, sacrificed and long since buried 'others') turning into each other and turning each other out distracts from the massive constituency they are but a representative sample for. : : : :: : I don't love the theatrical either but denial of the theatrality of everyday life is a deadly sin that prevents all that's good about life to come through. So, some friendly advice: shake that spasm, those nerves, this cramp; think of ways to work around those guns or if you have to be surrounded by them, towards a situation where there is no cause for them anymore.

> : : : : : Dianna: piet, if I understand you properly, which I'm not sure I do, you're saying that it's OK for Churchill to fabricate an historical incident, distort Russell Thornton's work, and lie about what the sources he himself cited say, so long as he's opposing capitalism and adding to the victimization narative? : : : : : Do you have any idea how unacceptable that is to anyone who believes in truth? ----------- If all we were talking about were the unhinged leftist rants we're quite used to hearing from the hard left, however distasteful I found Churchill, I'd be defending his right to say it. But plagiarism, fabrication, distortion of other scholars' work, and source torture are a very different matter. They are a violation of all intellectual integrity, and to allow that is to say that there is no truth, only propaganda. : : : : Do you really want to live in that world? I surely don't. : : : : : : : :

Piet: I know it's very much a matter of disposition, but I am going to assume you may easily enough agree that representation is as much an art and sensibility as it is a science (not to mention the extent to which intuition and ambition to cleanse conscience should be subject to role assignment rule [[rather than ruled out and/or afforded a dubious exception status]] if we wanna get there any time soon)? ------- The strategy to stick to facts, the law's letter etcetera has nothing on this 'other' outlook, it is as likely to radicalize the wrong way (instead of honestly autonimizably local, vertical and radiant rootbranchfruit sorta stuff you end up with expansion tending to and provoking opposing extremism, in one word: polarization (of that which becomes deadly when unmixed: the human psyche, to suppose such fake rigidity is to conjure up chimerical agency), in 2 words (twice): collateral damage, devil's spawn). To raise the potential of clout and force to mobilize not accumulated and suppressed aggra into a venting venture but to undo the rigidity of rock requires kinetic polarization, a de- rather than viceful affair. ------- In other words, though you know that fiction is a fabrication either way, success can be come by with different mixes and ways of answering two fundamentally different needs, those of the escapee and those that want to be met within a person who calls his/herself sober lover of reality. ------- The lifelike and the ring of truth calls for and commands attention using tools of the trade such as art of collage and collocation and you can't tell me there is purely analytic way of doing things that doesn't borrow and partake of these methods. The mix is a matter of taste is all. Don't for godsake try to standardize things. ------- The UC would be crazy to let such an attention getter go. It's attention of livewires too; compare to the deadbeat decency of the anticipatorily aenemic aspirants to corporate callousness in the Horowitz segment of the C-span video right after the Ward one (talk about the art of tag/file together 'contrastsomely'). ------------ Originality does not exist in an absolute sense, there's a lot more to be grateful for (read, respect and yes, restore integrity to) than most of us realize.* ------- Instead you moron neocons, rightwing toughjerkies and what not insist you must regulate, meter, canalize, zone and monopolize in every way possible (deregulate when it comes to taxing and 'eco-standard-upholdery' of course, as the case may be, seasoned to taste); this is plain insulting and disgraceful and as far as I am concerned should be made illegal as soon as possible, not likely in a world where one is encouraged to attempt to stand out and can claim an ueberproportionate slice of the pie in legal ways .. . . and those ways have runaway tendencies one can only compare to usurious practice or the growthrates of unstoppably terminal cancers. ------------ * = That gratitudebetter not be only for godgiven things but in most cases we need to go look for ways to preserve/thank our own ability to accept those 'things' the way god gave them too (clean water anybody? [[Do fishes have the right to own their medium without being 'infiltrated' by 'superior' brainpower sporting, but in more than one way to them, sickening beings, if they have feelings and thoughts, what would the ones regarding our sense of superiority look like]]? Or are you unshamefacedly into 'source torture' for most and bottled versions for an elite? The blessings of fruittree filled backyard for everybody? You tell me that's reserved for heavenly afterlife?), perhaps by maintaining that ability! In fact, it behooves us to thank Deeper Pow*(d)*ers (in a way that honours through hiliting and that doesn't in all cases exclude tweaking, squeezing and ways to stimulate and mimick more proportionate distribution but please, leave chemical action to life itself; making an industry out of these processes is to me like . .. what .. . .replacing black migrants and miners worldwide with white christians would be to you)! ------- Ps: It don't fucking matter wether such ecologicality is attributable to NA or not! Could be purely mythical as yet for all I care! We need it for NowAmericans and not just for them either!

> Dianna: If you'd been to this idiot's website, you'd already know he makes as much sense as the Unabomber. GAZE.

wow, that's the site owner!!!!! A great honour to be left up by a man who thinks so little of me .. .or perhaps I better watch out, he might wanna dishonour and have plans to make a spectacle of me; hey, tell you what, we can enact the famous Rops painting, I have some friends (perhaps Ellen ten Damme would like to join; she just lost the qualifier for german entry to the eurovision song festi - though she is dutch) with a raging song that translates (loosely): 'blew you up' - plattgefickt is about fucking the lust to make war (AND call THAT art) right out of men ------ Imagine, she'd be crucified, Ward her angel, I her devil and you could play saint anthony pulling his hair out. Could be cathartic no? ------ Ain't that a beautiful proposition to someone who can't even characterize my site sufficiently enough to be called fair though? That's in return for keeping me up here bud. ----------- Ps: i not only AM an idiot, I even collect links to them, idiot savants to be exact and though you are an idiot too for calling my dustcloud interpretation skills on a par with those evinced by the UnaBomber, those that cause clouds of usually toxic dust by way of bombs (which I emphatically denounce, no matter what denomination, flavor, target and/or noble cause, the result is ALWAYS justifiable outrage; it's just not a remedy like fresh dust properly selected, dosed and applied is; subtle, slow and very sustainable, go look at evolution buddy and be careful you don't plagiarize or insult it, you'd be spiting your own face) ---

> Chuck Grimes wrote: got to thinking about this and decided Brown's article or essay was not good coin and would probably have never made it through peer review. I wouldn't pass it. Here's the reason. Brown attacked Churchill, but offered no positive case alternative. It wasn't an academic paper. It was shit job. The way to counter Churchill in an academic context is to write the positive case history of the small pox epidemic and let Churchill's paper die by default. Brown didn't do that.
> Thomas Brown: Nonsense. The alternative scenario is clearly laid out in my original draft: the epidemic was accidental. If you don't like my exposition of the argument, then see one of the authors in my bibliography for more detail. Michael Trimble's dissertation is a good place to start. He gives a day-by-day epidemiological analysis of what happened. That was never my goal.
>
> As a limited e-list discussion outlined, it is likely the US withheld vaccinations or distributed them selectively to `friendlies' and withheld them from whoever was considered temporarily out of favor. That's a positive case alternative.
> There are a number of problems with that scenario, but Doug asked us not to discuss the evidence on the list, and so I won't. Furthermore, even if valid, it doesn't begin to address the fact that the crucial details of Churchill's story are fabricated. We already knew how the epidemic happened. The thrust of my essay was an exegesis of Churchill's fraud, or rather,

Weise (student who killed grandparents and 7 students at Minnesota reservation school he attended) most clearly expressed his philosophy in the following statement of frustration with the raceless, cultureless void of liberal industrial society:

> "The Natives you've known to be sympathetic to the cause are probably ones who've experienced firsthand what kind of problems cultural and race mixing can cause. As a result of cultural dominance and interracial mixing there are barely any full blooded Natives left. Where I live less than 1% of all the people on the Reservation can speak their own language, and among the youth wanting to be black has run rampant. Under a National Socialist government, things for us would improve vastly... That is, if we haven't already become too soft from the way this materialistic life-style has made us! , and that is why I am pro-Nazi. It's hard though, being a Native American National Socialist; people are so misinformed, ignorant, and closed-minded it makes your life a living hell."

You just can't begin with what's left after all else fails until all else has failed; but if' you're extremely impatient there is no need to wait bycause there's always somewhere where all else has failed already (typically there where the US warmachine thinks it's going to be very welcome).

- 37 comments, the first one shows an aspect of the shadow side to the semi-identitarian slipping away of life and the commenter don't even mention the hysterical and chronic stuck on partying mode many travellers regard as their honour code. ---- other participants post roguetory.org.uk/ vs powertothepeople.org.uk/

> The roots of the hysteria against travellers are'nt hard to discern. For far too many years the 'English countryside' has been the preserve of a privilieged white elite. The planning system is a pillar of the system which preserves inflated property values and ensures that many rural areas remain exclusively occupied by the rich. The same people who scream for de-regulation and neo liberalism are suddenly advocates of stringent planning laws and bureaucratic intervention. Their hypocrisy stinks to high heaven.
> Anything to preserve the cultural and economic character of the countryside as an aparthied zone for Britains privilieged. No blacks, no travellers, no Muslims. The population can rot to death in 'de-regulated' slums as long as the 'country club' is open to the right members (white business class only).

> system, and can anyone really argue that a traveller's sight has the same ecological impact as an 'executive' housing development or golf club?

But when University of Hawai'i Professor Haunani Trask wrote a book of poetry called "Racist White Woman" ------which detailed "her fantasy of punching, knifing, mutilating and ultimately murdering a white colleague she despised" it was published. --- Since the beginning of this blog, we recently realized, we have repeatedly encountered the sticky tar of a disturbing heartlessless now becoming obvious in the faculties and student bodies of many American universities. [Professor Trask, on Sept. 12, 2001, quoted Malcolm X on President Kennedy's murder: "Chickens have come home to roost." Okay: ditto, X; right back at ya, Malcolm.] --- We wrote about artists, but most of them are attached to, or emerged from, academia ------ Jon Haddock, for example, championed by Arizona State Curator John Spiak; the entire museum curatorial staff ------ Marilyn Zeitlin, Heather Lineberry, Spiak, et al who created the despicable and falsely-titled "Democracy in America" exhibition; also Heidi Hesse, Beverly McIver, Michael Ray Charles, Neal Lester, John Jota Lea'os ------ every one of them parroting with a twisted smirk the notion that whatever America gets, she deserves. -----------

> Out-of-Context, Nonviolent Churchill Quote of the Day: "These megastates are not immutable. They can be taken apart. They can be destroyed. But first we have to decide that we can do it and that we will do it."

You posted a truely non-violent Ward quote while trying to imply it isn't. > Never mind the irony inherent in the "Kadhafi International Human Rights Prize," and the unlikelihood that Churchill, et al, would have traveled to Libya against US travel restrictions to receive, in Churchill's words, "nothing from them, no money, no guns, nothing." The article demonstrates that, among other things, the feud between Bellecourt and Churchill has been around for over a decade, and that Churchill's belief that Bellecourt stole money given to him by Qadaffi for "The Amerindian Nation" has existed nearly as long.

Via that same site I find a Hanson article. Though orders of magnitude loonier, it uses the type of reasoning similar to that used by Brown (yeah, that Brown, the Tommy) at a frontpage march 4th symposium (Tim Wise [20 Mb audio downloads] holds the fort for the left up against 5 others, typical in itself though the right likes deny and disown this fact turning it around and into a baseless charge that feeds those hungry for lies). Indians were plentiful, now scarce, down on their luck and low in selfesteem but can we call their decimation genocide? This question is deflected and it's weight stuffed into a supposedly and implied as being representative instance that can more plausibly be denied as follows: 'the states did not use smallpox as a weapon other than acci- and incidentally'. But were the answer were a more positive 'no' than possible from a mere paucity of data, the ones that speak for genocide (having taken place) are not thereby disproven. The two articles mentioned amass 91K flattened to text.

> Week-of-Mon-20050321/005929.html Meanwhile, scholars across the country are coming to Mr. Churchill's defense. On Tuesday, a letter signed by 400 professors appeared as an advertisement in the Daily Camera, a newspaper in Boulder. They argued that the attacks by politicians and the news media against Mr. Churchill smacked of a new McCarthyism. "Apparently," they wrote, "September 11 is now the third rail of American intellectual life: to critically probe into its causes and to interrogate the international role of the United States is treated as heresy."

> Ward Churchill: " .. .the problem with the idea that it was an inside job is that it suggests that brown people are not capable of such feats and gives all the credit to the white man, another master race fantasy". ----- ChuckO: "It's a shame that some folks on the left adhere to this fantasy that the U.S. state is all powerful and watching our every move. They ignore the more radical and profound interpretation of 9-11 as showing that the U.S. government is very vulnerable, even to a small conspiracy armed with weapons, a good plan, and plenty of zeal."

> Joe W. says: "The AK Press also provided 'security' for Churchill presumably to ward off the members of the press who have been trailing him around the country. As Churchill spoke he was flanked by a group of AK Press people with a decidedly martial sense of purpose - one even wore dark sunglasses for effect. Afterwards some of us joked that these were his own 'Little Eichmanns'. Needless to say my question as to how he reconciles the fact that his 'roosting chickens' thesis is consistent with the 'war on terror' mythology was not asked."

> http://snurl.com/emxz ps (2015) 18.05.2012 - Santa Cruz, CA - The man known for decades on the radio by his Hipp name passed away in his sleep at home in Silver City, Nevada.

I noted the remarks on Watt in the conversation between radical ecologist Brower and JEFFREY ST. CLAIR counterpunch.org/stclair06082004.html in the third issue of june last year and it's meanwhile gotten some sort of WChurchill treatment, contrary to Ward though, Moyers has allowed being bought off and out ("apologizing for not just incomplete but even unattributable quote" depending on how fanatically the righties wanna clean their slate - one could probably make every letter in this sentence represent a different blog). All catalytically triggered processes are/have effects which diverge greatly from the state, substance and intent of the proverbially unmoved movers who are usually a minuscule portion of and minutely diverging version from some huge mass (zionism and messianism vs jewishness is as terrorism vs islam??); to generalize about this like you do is incorrect (no matter how much it may be considered wise by affirmative activists or otherwise politically motivated equality idealists).

Some of these effects may be calculated to rebound catalytically, thus a sort of reciprocal feed and further for substance, quantity and intent/intensity of initiating catalyst starts aforementioned effects to enter vicious circle with latter results at such speed and to such an extent that the whole ball of cheggen wax loses *(in)*sight of beginning and end until the fuel is spent.

Ward writes: " .. .inertia of pacifist principles .. ."
I am going to argue that his stubborn refusal to wax eloquent about the potential of those principles, not to mention their application, no matter how ever farther apart and fewer between they seem to be getting all the while, as he is (only too) willing to go on (and on) about the drawbacks (without mentioning that his line of reasoning implies total and utterly unreasonable hegemony that will only wither from being fought to exhaustion [[the terrorist meme]] proves him to [[probably willy nilly]] be an agent of the right and that's the main reason they have trumpeted his alledged subversion so clear, loud, far and widely).

His is in fact, alas, the more realist reprentation of reality on the ground. It is however never ever time for a last stand or desperate last resort measures unless you rule out the realm of possibilities (the true motor of all the ongoing fresh beginnings from the humblest speck of dust on up and beginning with squatting more than anything, ideally followed up speedily by 'ingratiatory embeddiment' in the neighbourhood, success in the local legislature; legalization and graduating to the sort of support and nurture than works little miracles like the one I started my examples out with, my favorite; the oldest and only way for heaven to take root on planets).

Modeling is all the rage in this day and age; nothing happens any more without model making, rehearsing and simulation. In as far as Ward interprets and represents the left accurately (forgetting what he leaves out for a minute) he shows and relentlessly, mercilessly emphasizes and mirrors their weakness, gives voice to the obsession with sordid sides and facets of reality besides the disinclination and near complete inaptitude of presenting a jocularly infectious form of 'voorpret' (anticipatory pleasure). BUT that does make it all the more urgent to emphasize there isn't enough 'don't just count, take a chance with y our blessings' type of creativity about in the only way that counts, offer a sample to which nothing comes close. Utopian forces, unite.

Ward is a nice change from the usual 'open spaces for potential to sprout up and blossom blahblah blah' type rhetoric but to fall short of 'm is as bad as overshooting your goals. I am still convinced that unless you dramatize the 'right idea', nobody will follow up and actually begin alternatives, let alone work on a chance to change and outgrow all the bad stuff. I fancied animating a few little epic and organic videos in the eighties, nobody has taken me up on that yet. The folks that got a giant grant that could go some way toward it aren't up to it (yet): seercentre.org.uk

To the extent govts disallow establishment of non-profit oriented squats, let alone the swift legalization thereof (rather than the current practice of ceding right of way to swifter kinds of money to displace them) people like Churchill become more believable, relevant and correct. A completely avoidable pity.

Anglosphere blog is a favorite of Nick's, this item takes a swipe at Ward Churchill -----

> "The detractors often argue that because our origins are tainted by slavery and conquest, we are a tainted nation. But it is more the other way around -- because people like Ward Churchill hate America and everything about it, they have gone on a selective hunt through history to emphasize everything negative in the record of its founding. This gets back to the point of the Exit, that we have been discussing in some previous posts. Prior to the Exit (the point in history at which productivity became more rewarding to the individual than predation -- roughly, the Industrial Revolution) almost every civilization on the plant was based on slavery, serfdom, or some other form of coerced labor and labor tied to the land (i.e., the people who worked the land did not have the option of leaving.)" -----

... and pretends the pre anglo period was predatory and the post one productive. Assenine supposition of course, since in reality these poles form a seesaw with immoderation and other flaws on either side conjuring up the (swings to prevalence of) other killer culler. Here's my 30th comment: Ward Churchill chooses to honour and yes, love the 50.000 years before a little and by definition shortlived disaster, now, yes, even at this late stage of the game, calling itself the . .
.cough .. .'productive' 'anglosphere' (demographically disastrous desertspawn crossed with gullible naive northerners) saw fit to happen. Oh, it's productive alright. Erosion and pollution mostly. > "America, which at such great cost was given to us by others whom we have all but now forgotten."

Chuck Munson on lbo-talk: Back in March, Ward Churchill spoke several times in the Bay Area. At one of these events, he took written questions from the audience. One audience member asked him the standard "what can we do?" question. Churchill smiled and said that this was one of those annoying questions that only Americans asked him. He related that in his travels around the world people never asked him this question. He argued that they don't ask this question because they know what they can do. But Americans persist in asking this question, despite having access to incredible resources and privilege.
